River Line Defenses For Capital Rushed; Communists Begin New Drive in North

Nanking, Dec. 7 (AP).—A swift Communist maneuver has trapped the 250,000-man garrison from Suchow, probably beyond any hope of escape or help, government sources admitted today.

With the best of the government's troops in all east China caught in a net, defenses were rushed along the Hwai and Yangtze Rivers. These are the last lines of defense before the capital.

Col. Chiang Wei-kuo, adopted son of President Kai-shek, is believed among those trapped. His tank column helped to break the first Red drive on Suchow, 211 miles northwest of Nanking.

Town in North Taken

Meanwhile, the Communists appear to have launched a drive n north China against the Peiping-Tientsin area.

Associated Press Correspondent Spencer Moosa in Pieping said the Communists were pouring through Kupehkow Pass out of Jehol Province and had taken Huaijou, only 30 miles northeast of Peiping.

Government sources said the Suchow garrison, which is trying to fight southward and rejoin the defenders of Nanking, now is compressed in a pocket 8 miles long and 5 miles in depth about 50 miles southwest of Suchow. (This would be about 90 miles from the closest government forces not already encircled—the 80,000 men of the Hwai River line.)

Chen Sprang Trap

Gen. Chen Yi, whose Communist armies of east China had smashed to the Hwai River line some 100 miles from Nanking, was credited with setting a trap for the Suchow garrison.

When the order came through for the garrison to abandon Suchow and fight south, General Chen left off his attacks along the Hwai and rushed his main force northwestward. They intercepted the garrison which had been headed toward Suhsien to attempt liberation of the government's encircled Twelth Army Group.

The Nationalist force then swung to the west and "stampeded," according to the Communist radio's boast, when it came under Red attack.

Foreign military observers said Chiang now must decide whether to concentrate his forces on the Hwai—where they might be encircled—or along the lightly held Yangtze.

'Basket of Babies' Means Triplets, Nurse Discovers

Ypsilanti, Mich., Dec. 7 (AP).—Nurse Dorothy Heath was startled early today when a young man approached her in a corridor of Beyer Memorial Hospital and told her "I've got a basketful of babies."

He did have, too.

She lifted the cover, peered inside and saw triplets, two boys and a girl.

Charles Logan, a cement worker of nearby Wayne, Mich., told her his wife, Elizabeth, had given birth to the babies at home about an hour earlier.

Logan bundled the infants into the basket and his wife into the car and headed for the nearest hospital.

Mother, babies and nurse all were reported doing well.

—Report on Eastern Europe—

3 Satellite States Closing Year of 'Dramatic' Recovery Backed Up by Good Harvest

(First of Five Articles)

By Theodore H. White

Copyright, 1948, Overseas News Agency

PARIS, Dec. 7—The snow is about to put the tired land to rest across central Europe, from the mountains of Bohemia to the borders of the Soviet Union. As it falls, it seals the first season of domestic security the Communist governments of Poland, Hungary and Czechoslovakia have known since they came to power.

This security now rests on something much more solid than police control and Russian victory. It rests on the dramatic impact of industrial recovery, backed up by the first good postwar harvest. Although Czechoslovakia drags her feet in the pattern of central European economics, recovery in Hungary matches, and in Poland's case outstrips, the gains of the Western continent under the Marshall Plan.

Poland, shattered by the war, is the star of the Eastern European League. Proportionately she suffered more heavily than any Allied nation in the war; she has recovered faster than any other except possibly Britain and Russia.

A driving, stocky little man of 43 called Hilary Minc (pronounced Mintz) is the architect of Poland's recovery. A French-trained economist, he has emerged as the outstanding Communist industrial genius of Europe.

Poland is closing this year with the most striking set of industrial statistics in continental Europe. Electric energy output is up from a prewar 3.9 billion kilowatt hours to 6.6 billion. Steel production is outrunning prewar levels, while construction and engineering totals are immeasurably ahead. The Poles began their first production of tractors this year and will roll the first Polish-made automobiles off an assembly line next year. Coal production, their greatest industrial achievement, is up from a prewar annual 38 million tons to a current 67 million, making her the greatest furnisher of export coal to the rest of Europe; coal brings in enough foreign exchange to float the rest of the industrial program.

Acquisition of Rich Silesia Helps Explain Statistics

A large part of Polish recovery is explained by the incorporation of the new territories carved out of eastern Germany's industrial Lower Silesia. But the Poles point out that although they occupied the resources, minerals and farmlands, the factories were wrecks, the mines deserted. The new factories are turning out goods with men and women who three years ago were Polish peasants.

The Pafawag works at Wroclaw, the city the Germans called Breslau, was the greatest boxcar producer of prewar Europe, turning out 6000 cars a year. The war

U. S. Workers Barred From Charter Race

Will Not Be Allowed To Run for Office or Engage in Politicking

Federal employes will not be allowed to run for office or engage in active politicking in the coming election for the new Montgomery County Council.

That was the ruling handed down yesterday by the Civil Service Commission. It was made at the request of Gerald D. Morgan, chairman of the legal committee of the Montgomery County Charter Committee, who had been seeking clarification of Government workers' status in the January 6 contest.

The commission ruled that "Federal employes as individuals may sign the nominating petitions to have candidates' names placed on the ballot in the January 6, 1949, Montgomery County election. However, they cannot initiate, circulate, solicit signatures or be otherwise involved in the nominating petitions.

Section 9 Restrictions Cited

"Federal employes are prohibited by the political activity restrictions of Section 9 (a) of the Hatch Act and of the Civil Service Rules from becoming candidates for the office of county councilman in Montgomery County."

The commission further pointed out that their ruling was influenced by the present Maryland law which forbids wholly nonpartisan elections at the county level. This legislation was enacted at a recent session of the General Assembly.

The Democratic Party in Montgomery County has already given its indorsement to some of the candidates which the Charter Committee also supports.

"All the factors in this case indicate that this is not a wholly nonpartisan election within the meaning and spirit of the Hatch Act," the commission noted.

Montgomery County Charter officials saw the ruling as a setback to their campaign.

"This decision is a definite setback. It will remove all Federal workers from our Charter Com-

'One More Try' Saved Lives of Air Survivors

Search-Plane Ensign Urged Final Look Before Giving Up

Calhoun

Exhausted by 40 hours in the water, the 33 were picked up by the aircraft carrier Rendova last night from two life rafts in the tossing Pacific 1200 miles southwest of Honolulu. Four others were lost.

[Names of the four missing men were given as: Staff Sergt. William A. Colvin, jr., Cross City, Fla.; Sergt. Robert C. Harrell, Milledgeville, Ga.; Sergt. Charles T. Millpaugh, Port Jervis, N. Y., and Sergt. James A. Mitchell, Fort Wright, Wash.].

Lieut. Comdr. Steve G. Kona, Hammond, Ind., pilot of the Navy Privateer plane which spotted them, said he was preparing to return to base at Johnson Island when up spoke Ensign L. R. Johnson, Minneapolis.

"Johnnie said 'Let's just try one more—it will only take eight minutes,'" Kona related. "Two minutes before the end of that time my plane captain sighted a green dye marker directly beneath the plane. We went down to take a look. They were hanging on the gunwales, half inside and half outside."

Safe aboard the Rendova, Lieut. Col. William R. Calhoun, Birmingham, Ala., calmly told of waiting in the shark-infested sea for rescue. He was pilot of the C-54, which was forced down on a flight.

"We didn't decide to ditch," he said. "We just ran out of altitude."

One engine began throwing oil, and a second developed an oil leak. They prepared for an emergency landing in the dark.

Calhoun said the 30 passengers

District Man Faces 4 Charges Of Rape and One of Assault

Police yesterday charged a 36-year-old Washington laborer with four cases of rape and one of assault with attempt to commit rape.

The man, Willie Henry Massey, of 25 Quincy pl. nw., was arrested by a park policeman and policewoman Monday night at the Banneker playground, Georgia ave. and Eculid st. nw., where a 14-year-old girl was raped Friday night.

Police said Massey when arrested had in his possession an imitation .45-caliber automatic which could easily be taken for a real weapon.

Massey was placed in a special lineup yesterday morning at police headquarters, at which time he was positively identified by two 14-year-old girls.

The first identified Massey as the man who raped her twice at the Banneker playround Friday night. She said she and her girl friend had stopped at a drinking fountain when the man suddenly appeared and shoved a gun in her side. The other girl said the man attempted to rape her but was unsuccessful.

A 34-year-old Navy Department employe who was assaulted last Wednesday night in Rock Creek Parkway, in the rear of Francis Junior High School, 23d and M sts. nw., also singled out Massey as her attacker.

She said the man approached her in the 2300 block of N st. nw, threatened her with a gun and forced her to accompany him to the spot where he raped her.

Massey was also positively identified by a 22-year-old woman who said he raped her twice in the presence of her escort about a

Marshall Has Kidney Operation

One Organ Removed After Cysts Form; Is 'Getting Along Fine,' Report Says

(Picture on Page 3)

By Edward T. Folliard
Post Reporter

Secretary of State George C. Marshall underwent an operation yesterday in which one of his kidneys was removed.

Two cysts had formed on the kidney, it was learned, but they were not of a malignant nature.

The operation was performed at Walter Reed Hospital at 8 a. m. A bulletin issued there at 3 p. m. said the 67-year-old soldier-statesman was "getting along fine." The bulletin added that "no complications have developed."

Expected to Keep Post

In Administration circles, it was taken for granted that Secretary Marshall would resume his handling of the Nation's foreign affairs after a period of convalescence.

President Truman has the utmost admiration for Marshall. Upon his return from Key West, where he rested after his successful election campaign, he asked him to stay on as the No. 1 man of his Cabinet. He announced at a White House news conference last week that Marshall was perfectly willing to stay.

Marshall, who will be 68 on December 31, was in Walter Reed at the time Mr. Truman talked to reporters. State Department spokesmen had explained that he was there for "tests and examinations."

It turned out, however, that the kidney operation was one that the Secretary of State had been putting off for months, while he directed the "cold war" with the Soviet Union.

Department Announcement

The State Department early yesterday made this announcement:

"General Marshall underwent a kidney operation at Walter Reed Hospital this morning following a physical checkup last summer.

"Surgeons wished to operate then but because of the Paris Conference the operation was delayed until today."

At 10:30 a. m., Walter Reed Hospital issued a bulletin saying that the operation was performed 2½ hours earlier. It added:

"The operation was successful and General Marshall's condition is excellent. No complications are expected."

Col. James C. Kimbrough performed the operation.

Details Not Announced

In none of the official announcements was it disclosed that one of Marshall's kidneys had been removed. This information came from another source.

Why this was so was explained by Col. Joseph U. Weaver, commanding officer of Walter Reed, who said:

"Before the operation the entire matter was talked over with General Marshall and he requested that only daily bulletins concerning his condition be made public.

"He said that details of the operation were considered to be personal. In view of this decision

Macy Idea Indorsed

Dealer Association Supports Auto Industry 'Housecleaning'

By Edward F. Ryan
Post Reporter

The National Automobile Dealers Association (NADA), yesterday announced its support of the idea that the auto industry do its own "housecleaning."

In a statement, the NADA commented on the recent auto hearings conducted by the House subcommittee headed by Representative W. Kingsland Macy (R., N. Y.). A major recommendation by Macy was that the auto industry should "police its own backyard" against gouging practices like those revealed in the hearings, or risk control legislation.

The NADA statement voiced agreement with the idea that whatever "housecleaning" is needed should come from within the industry and not through Congress.

"The association has long insisted that the honest dealers, acting through their national organization, should wipe out all bad trade practices within their power," the statement said. "To this end NADA has given and will continue to give its full support."

The statement said the major sales practices scored in the hearings had been the object of a Nation-wide drive by the NADA, by most of its 35,011 individual members, and 60 affiliated groups. It said the better trade practices campaign had been pursued steadily since 1946.

The House subcommittee had lent support to the campaign, it was stated, by emphasizing the unfairness of certain trade practices and their ultimate damage to dealers using them.

On one point the NADA was sharply critical of the Macy subcommittee. NADA protested that the group had failed to substantiate a statement made by Macy when the hearings were called that American car buyers in the first seven months of 1948 were out of pocket some 450 million dollars as a result of under-valued trade-in allowances, and having to buy extras they did not want.

NADA said some 45,000 new car dealers through the country were "smeared" by the Macy statement. The dealers' organization protested that the subcommittee does not plan to make a national survey to prove the Macy statement.

John T. M. Reddan, counsel for the Macy subcommittee, recalled that the national gouging figure of 450 million dollars was obtained by projecting on a national basis the gouging estimates derived from examination of 60 per cent of all new car sales in the metropolitan area for the first seven months of this year.

If the subcommittee had sought to "smear" dealers, said Reddan,

Peurifoy, Welles Identify 3 Items Chambers Swears Were Handed Over

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

Theft of top secret documents from the State Department in 1937-38 meant "our codes were being read by foreign nations during the whole period," a State Department official said last night.

John E. Peurifoy, Assistant Secretary of State for administration, made the statement to the House Un-American Activities Committee as investigators launched a search for ned Red spy suspects.

In these other developments:

1. Former Undersecretary of State Sumner Welles, second in command of the department when the documents were allegedly delivered to Chambers, and Peurifoy, now in charge of the department's security precautions, identified as "authentic" three documents shown them and said it would be detrimental to the national interest to publish them.

2. Acting Chairman Karl E. Mundt (R., S. Dak.) of the Un-American Activities Committee said the committee is trying to arrange for examination of Chambers at a night hearing tonight, but hasn't yet got permission from the Federal grand jury examining him in New York.

3. Mundt said it has not been decided whether today's day and night sessions will be open or closed, but Representative F. Edward Hebert (D., La.), who succeeded in forcing a closed meeting of the committee yesterday, said he will move to stop all further public hearings in the case "until we have a case ready for the jury."

4. Mundt announced that the committee has received information that "at least three" former Government employes in two separate agencies funneled confidential data to Chambers, before he renounced communism. In a slightly different version, Representative Richard M. Nixon (R., Calif.) said Chambers had named four persons altogether as passing on the secret data to him.

Mundt quoted Chambers as charging that Alger Hiss, assistant to former Assistant Secretary of State Francis Sayre during the 1937-38 period, was one of the three or four. Hiss, now head of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, said Chambers was lying in his original statement that he was a member of the Communist Party and brought a $75,000 libel action against him.

Confidential Documents Produced

In a pre-trial hearing of the slander suit, Chambers produced 65 confidential Government documents in his possession. The Un-American Activities Committee Monday made public part of Chambers' deposition in the Baltimore hearing. Chambers, now a senior editor with Time magazine, said he introduced Hiss to a Russian agent in 1937 and "following that meeting Alger Hiss began a fairly constant flow of such material as we have before us here."

Hiss denied the second charge "without qualification." Both Chambers and Hiss are now being questioned by the Federal grand jury in New York about the cans of microfilm removed by House Committee investigators last week from a hollow pumpkin on Chambers' Maryland farm.

Nixon told newsmen Chambers has since named three additional persons as having relayed the documents to him. Neither Mundt nor Nixon would disclose their names. Nixon said all three men formerly worked in the Government, one in the State Department, and the others elsewhere. He said none of the new suspects is familiar to the general public.

Statement Released

Peurifoy's implication that confidential documents removed from the State Department were all that unnamed foreign governments needed to break State Department codes came after he inspected three of the documents in the possession of the committee.

Mundt released this statement, which he said was made to the committee by Peurifoy in executive session:

"I would like to say this, and this is purely a gratuitous comment on my part, but what I regard as most serious about this

Truman Order Changes Army Trial System

Allows Enlisted Men To Sit on Courts Trying Other Soldiers

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

Sweeping changes in Army court martial procedure—aimed partly at equalizing the justice meted out to officers and enlisted men—were ordered yesterday by President Truman.

Under the new Army courts-martial manual which goes into effect February 1, enlisted men may sit on courts trying other GIs. Heretofore, only officers sat on such courts.

Officers said the new regulations will apply only to the Army, under yesterday's executive order, though the present courts-martial manual covers Air Force personnel as well.

No final decision has been made by the Air Force as to whether it will continue the present Army procedures, adopt the new manual or set up a separate system of justice of their own.

Lawyers are in dispute as to whether Title II of the Selective Service Act—which made major changes in the Article of War—applies to the Air Force. The Germans Flee Russian Zone By Thousands

Berlin, Dec. 7 (U.P.).—Germans are fleeing from the Russian occupation zone to the United States and British zones at the rate of 25,000 to 40,000 a month, it was disclosed officially today.

Emphasizing conditions in the Russian zone, officials pointed to an announcement that five Germans had been sentenced to death by the Russians on charges of "economic sabotage." They were accused of engaging in black market operations with the western sectors of Berlin and the western occupation zones.

Three of the five were sentenced in their absence. They had joined the flow of refugees to the western zones.

The Russian-licensed news agency ADN announced the sentences in what appeared to be a "show-window" trial to terrorize Germans.

Gen. Lucius D. Clay, United States commander in chief, divulged that the monthly arrivals of Germans in the American zone total from 20,000 to 30,000.

British public safety officials said 5000 to 10,000 Germans were fleeing monthly to the British zone.

In addition to this flow of Germans seeking the safety of democratic rule, several thousand refugees from Czechoslovakia, Poland and other countries behind the iron curtain are reaching the American zone monthly, it was revealed.

It is known also that many Russians are arriving. But if Allied officials are able to estimate their number, they are not saying anything.

The Assembly of the legal city government of Berlin, now headquartered in the western sectors, unanimously elected Socialist Ernst Reuter as lord mayor today. He will serve until the new Assembly, elected Sunday, meets in

Jury Nearing 'Conclusion' in Spy Inquiry

Prosecutor Declares Microfilm Disclosure Gave Probe Big Boost

New York, Dec. 7 (AP).—United States Attorney John F. X. McGohey today said "we are closer than we ever have been before to a final conclusion" in the Federal grand jury espionage probe.

"We feel that we are finally getting some real evidence," he declared.

Disclosure by Whittaker Chambers last week of microfilm of important Government documents gave a boost to the investigation, the United States attorney said. He did not comment further.

Chambers, emerging today from a second session before the spy-hunting grand jury, said the microfilm had been out of his hands 10 years.

The confessed one-time Communist courier told newsmen outside the jury room, however, that he knew where he could get it during that time.

He would not say where it had been kept.

With Chambers before the jury today was Alger Hiss, the other key figure in the melodramatic inquiry.

Chambers has accused Hiss of serving a Communist underground with him in Washington. Chambers recently charged Hiss gave him State Department documents for delivery to the Russians.

Hiss has denied he was or is a Communist.

Chambers told newsmen the microfilm was not in his possession between 1938 and 1948.

Strife Foreseen

ECA Will Stop Moving Half Of Bulk Cargoes in U. S. Ships

The Economic Cooperation Administration last night announced abandonment of the policy of carrying half of all American bulk cargoes for European recovery in American-flag ships.

The action foreshadowed fresh strife in the Government as well as in official relations with the shipping industry.

Vice Admiral W. W. Smith, retired, chairman of the Maritime Commission, said immediately that the commission would protest the decision of recovery officials.

ECA Administrator Paul G. Hoffman in a letter to Senator Bridges (R., N. H.) said the decision was prompted by the higher freight costs of United States vessels.

The shift is expected to leave the bulk cargo business almost exclusively to foreign shipping. The 50 per cent provision will continue to apply to machinery, vehicles and other "package" cargoes.

The foreign assistance act requires Hoffman to use American vessels for half the tonnage of recovery shipments "as far as is practicable" and "to the extent such vessels are available at market rates."

Hoffman's letter said the ECA general counsel, presumably basing his judgment on the "market rates" phrase, has ruled that ECA need not abide by the 50 per cent restriction laid down by Congress.

Hoffman noted that it costs $4.50 a ton more to ship coal to France by American vessels than by foreign ships.

The charge that ECA is "selling out our merchant fleet" was made earlier by Maritime Commissioner Grenville Mellen, who apparently heard of the decision before it was

Poetry Is Yen of Red General Chen; Verses Now Seem Strangely Prophetic

Gen. Chen Yi, Red commander on the central China front, may not be the ablest of the Chinese generals in the field, but he is most certainly the best poet of the lot. Take, for example, these lines on victory:

"I have seen my comrades riding together on horseback . . .
"Fluttering under the sky are the red flags of October . . ."

GEN. CHEN YI
Poet and general

The verse was written some years back, but is as apt today, as General Chen's columns close in on some 250,000 Nationalist troops trapped southwest of Suchow.

There were times when General Chen had to drink bitter tea. But in the past couple of years, the brew has been sweetened by success in battle. Only a few months ago, after a year of siege, Versifier Chen captured Tsinan, queen city of rich Shantung Province. And now the entrapment of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek's Suchow defenders.

How did the Communist general get to be a poet? Better ask: How did the poet get to be a Communist general?

Chen Yi was born to great wealth, a member of the landlord aristocracy. He passed through the Chinese classical education like a scholar and was sent on to France to study at the University of GGrGenoble.

While a student abroad, in 1919-1921, Chen fell in with a group of Chinese intellectuals headed by Chou En-lai, since become the chief negotiator for the Chinese Communist Party. Chen was already a Communist when he returned to native Szechuan.

Chen entered the army, and in 1927, when Chiang drove the Communists from the government and set out to smash them, Chen threw his lot in with the Reds.

In the early 30's the hard-pressed Communists undertook their historic "Long March" north to set up a new government. Chen was one of those who remained behind in central China to harass the Nanking government with guerilla warfare.

In 1937 the Nationalists and Communists patched up their differences, temporarily, to fight the invading Japs. Chen brought his guerillas into the new Fourth Army, under Gen. Yeh Ting. Four years later Yeh was wounded and captured in an outbreak of fighting between the Reds and Nationalists, and Chen was named acting commander of the Fourth. Chen assumed full command of the Fourth, now called the East China People's Liberation Army, in 1946, after Yeh was killed in a plane accident.

Chen is married and the father of two children. He is considered something of an expert at chess. But his reputation rests on his lines — military, political and poetical.

Last summer, while exerting a squeeze on beleaguered Tsinan, Chen set up across the river from the encircled, hunger-ridden city a "reception" hall for Nationalist deserters. This hospitality line worked to some extent. Similar tactics led to the sudden collapse of the city's defenses when the chief defending general joined the Reds with his 8000 men.

Many years ago when his guerilla band was surrounded and the wounded Chen despaired of living, he wrote of going "to hell to assemble" the men who had died fighting iwth him. He survived, however, and later he could write:

"When old friends meet you and inquire about me,
"Tell them to look closely at the desolation in the enemy's rear."

It could be that Post Chen was also a grim prophet.

Mme. Chiang To Have Tea With Trumans

President Truman will receive Madame Chiang Kai-shek at tea Friday, 10 days after her arrival here to plead for United States aid to China.

The wife of China's generalissimo reached Washington last Wednesday.

Charles G. Ross, White House press secretary, said Madame Chiang will be the guest of the President and Mrs. Truman at 5 o'clock tea.

She will be accompanied by Mrs. George C. Marshall, wife of Secretary of State Marshall, at whose nearby Leesburg, Va., home she has been staying in semi-seclusion since her arrival aboard the former presidential plane, "Sacred Cow."

Visit Technically Unofficial

Asked by newsmen whether Mr. Truman would hold a separate conference with Madame Chiang, as well as receiving her for tea, Ross replied that he did not know.

Although Mme. Chiang's visit is technically unofficial—in that she was not officially invited to this country—Chinese diplomats have suggested that she would ask for some three billion dollars in United States aid over the next three years to help China combat the encroaching Communist armies.

Meanwhile, Government officials said major American firms are planning to keep their Shanghai branches operating regardless of eventualities in the China crisis.

Officials said no firms have announced the intention of quitting Shanghai entirely, although several have said they may reduce staffs or otherwise curtail operations. Big American and British interests in the Orient are concentrated in Shanghai.

Announcement Probable

Michael J. McDermott, State Department press officer, told newsmen there may be a formal announcement soon on possible emergency measures in connection with the critical situation.

Diplomatic authorities said United States Marines or other forces would probably be sent to Shanghai only in the event of an emergency demanding the mass evacuation of Americans and other foreigners. So far, about 900 of more than 5000 Americans in China have left the country.

The United States Embassy has warned Americans to leave or risk grave uncertainties as Communist armies press southward.

Feng's Widow Lauded Russia, Reds Report

Shanghai, Dec. 7 (U.P.).—Mme. Feng Yu-hsiang, widow of the "Christian General" who died last September in a fire aboard a Russian ship, was quoted by the Chinese Communist radio today as saying her husband was cremated at a military funeral in Moscow attended by high Soviet officials.

The broadcast said Feng, who went to the United States as a government engineering observer and wound up making anti-government speeches, was en route to join the Chinese Communists in Manchuria when he died.

Mme. Feng arrived in Harbin, Manchuria last month with her husband's ashes, the broadcast said. It quoted her as praising life in the Soviet Union and denouncing the United States.

She said Russia was a "healthy, vibrant land where women can do whatever men can," while the United States is "run by a handful of Wall Street financial oligarchs." No amount of American aid will save President Chiang Kai-shek's government, the radio quoted her as declaring.

January. Reuter was named lord mayor in 1946, but the Russians refused to recognize him and he never took office.

Russian troubles were increased when 600 employes of the great Bewag electric power plant failed to show up for duty today in protest against conditions in the Soviet sector. Rudolf Wissel, technical director of the electrical corporation in western Berlin, said an additional 450 workers were expected to boycott the Russian-ruled plants.

The 600 who left their jobs today reported for duty at Shell House in the British sector. About 150 of them lived in the Russian sector, and they arrived carrying the few possessions they had been able to salvage.

Reds Nationalize Public Lavatories

Berlin, Dec. 7.—(NYHT).—Nationalizers of the Soviet zone have decided on nationalization of public lavatories, the official American Military Government newspaper reported today.

The American-controlled Neue Zeitung declared, "It can no longer be tolerated in the East Zone that money given by the citizens to old men and charwomen in these places be lost to the state."

Tojo Execution Delay Ordered By MacArthur

Tokyo, Dec. 7 (U.P.).—Gen. Douglas MacArthur today ordered a delay of at least nine days in the executions of former Premier Hideki Tojo and six other condemned Japanese war criminals.

MacArthur repeated his previous statement that the hangings would be postponed until the United States Supreme Court acts on appeals filed by two of the condemned men. The high court has scheduled hearings December 16 on the appeals of Gen. Kenji Doihara and Koki Hirota, a former premier.

MacArthur refused to say what action he would take if attorneys for the condemned men carry their appeals to the Supreme Courts of the 10 other nations that, with the United States, were represented on the International Court that sentenced Tojo and his companions.

Observers here had speculated that the defense could postpone the executions indefinitely by appealing to each nation in turn.

The British member of the Allied Control Council for Japan charged that the American Supreme Court's consent to hear arguments on whether to review the cases of Doihara and Hirota was a "surprising" step, likely to undermine the prestige of the international tribunal.

British Councilman Patrick Shaw said the court's action appeared to be "a partial recognition of the claim that the tribunal was not an international court, but a creation of the American President.

U. N. Unit Urges Freeing Soviet Wives

(From Press Dispatches)

Paris, Dec. 7.—The United Nations Legal Committee recommended today that Russia let Soviet wives of foreigners go through the Iron Curtain to join their husbands. The vote was 26 to 6, with Russia and her satellites opposing.

Now the resolution must go before the General Assembly, with a calendar crowded with more business than can be taken care of before weekend adjournment.

Chilean Delegate David Luis Cruz Ocampo, former Ambassador to Russia, told the committee today that "8 to 11 per cent of the Russian people" live and die in labor camps.

Pleading for the right of his own daughter-in-law to leave her Soviet homeland, Cruz Ocampo declared the Russian labor camp organization was unmatched in modern history.

He said the Russian argument that their women would be unhappy cooking for foreign men was "infantile."

"The majority of women all over the world, including in Russia, prepare the daily food for the family," the Chilean delegate said. "This woman probably does the same thing in Russia if she finds something to cook—which is not always possible."

To Russian charges yesterday that Chile was "fascist," Cruz Ocampo retorted that "the Yugoslav government also has been called fascist by Moscow. It's getting mighty hard to see just who is fascist.

"We are told the Soviet Union is paradise," he continued. "The simplest way to prove this would be for the Soviet Union to open its doors to the world."

U. S. Asks U. N. Recognition of South Korea

Paris, Dec. 7 (NYHT).—The United States asked the United Nations today to demonstrate in the case of Korea that whenever the Russians threaten terrorism and violence in efforts to spread communism, the rest of the world will line up solidly to block the endeavor.

American Delegate John Foster Dulles told the Political Committee of the General Assembly that if such a world solidarity could be made evident in strong enough fashion, it might possibly teach the Russians to renounce the threat or use of force as an instrument of international policy.

Specifically, Dulles asked the U. N. delegates formally to recognize the Republic of Korea that was established in American-occupied southern Korea as a result of U. N.-arranged elections. The Russians banned the elections in northern Korea.

The acting chief American delegate also asked continuance of the U. N. Korean Commission as a watchdog against Communist expansion, as an instrument to try to promote Korean unification and as an agency to observe withdrawal of Russian and American forces from Korea "as soon as practicable."

The Korean question is the last item the Political Committee can possibly complete before Assembly adjournment Saturday or Sunday, but there are indications the Russians may filibuster it to death.

On the Palestine question, the Security Council's Membership Committee decided today to refer the application of Israel for U. N. admission back to the Security Council without recommendation. It appears that any further action on the application at this session will have to come at the initiative of the Council itself.

During today's meeting, Argentina came out for the Israeli application, making a total of four Council members openly in favor of admitting the Jewish State. The others are the United States, Russia and the Soviet Ukraine.

The Gallup Poll

58 Pct. of Voters Favor U. S. Matching Russian Propaganda

By George Gallup
Director American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., Dec. 7.—How great an effort should this country make to tell the rest of the world the American side of the East-West controversy?

To learn how typical voters feel about this question the Institute sent 240 of its field reporters out to talk to representative people in every section of the country.

A study of interviewers' reports shows that the voters questioned believe in a ratio of two to one that we should match Russian expenditures for world propaganda dollar for dollar.

Here is one of the questions asked of about 3000 people living in rural sections and in small towns and large cities:

"It has been suggested that the United States should spend as much money in telling our side of the story to Europe and the world as Russia spends in telling her side. Do you agree or disagree with this?"

When the issue was put this way the opinions of the people interviewed divided as shown on the following table:

Agree, spend as much	58%
Do not agree	27
No opinion	15
	100%

A similar division of sentiment exists in various breakdowns of the particular cross-section interviewed. No real difference of opinion shows up between Republican and Democratic voters, for example, and only slight variations in the thinking of people in different sections of the country. However, slightly more college graduates agree with the proposition than people with less formal training.

Doolittle Demands Air Power Merger

Lieut. Gen. James H. Doolittle yesterday urged an immediate merger of the United States Air Force and naval aviation, declaring it would save "unnecessary billions" now being "wasted."

The blast of the USAF leader—now on inactive service—aroused immediate resentment in Navy circles and fanned anew the flames of interservice rivalry.

Doolittle—who led the Tokyo air raid and commanded air forces in both war theaters—demanded sweeping changes in the Nation's military setup.

Each in Own Element

He urged "an Army operating on the ground, a Navy operating on and under the water, and an Air Force operating in the air." Each, he declared, must work in its own element and be "intimately coordinated," depending upon the others for support.

Doolittle's views were printed in Air Force magazine, published by the Air Force Association, an organization composed of present and former USAF officers and men. Active officials of the Air Force hold office in the group, and Doolittle is chairman of its board.

Premier Stalin of Russia, said the airmen, sets the tune for a defense budget. He hopes to defeat us by forcing us to spend so much money we will destroy our economy and form of government.

Declaring that any waste or inefficiency plays into Stalin's hands, Doolittle said:

"We actually have two self-sufficient, competing air forces, each planning to win the air war in its own way . . . We cannot afford this luxury—this prodigality."

Under the plan advanced by Doolittle, the Navy would operate aircraft carriers, while planes aboard them would be manned by members of the combined air force, transferred from the Navy.

Cary to New Post

He suggested that the Marines might remain as they are, if they stay small. But should the Leathernecks "continue to grow," the service should be absorbed in one of the other arms, Doolittle stated.

Meanwhile, Charles C. Cary of Boston became executive secretary of President Truman's Air Coordinating Committee, a clearing house for all Government aviation policy.

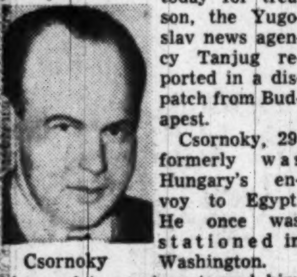
Cary has been special assistant since May, 1946, to John Nicholas Brown, Assistant Secretary of Navy for Air. He has been a member of the Air Coordinating Committee.

He succeeds John W. Sherman, who will become secretary to Defense Secretary James Forrestal's war council. In this role, Sherman, a former Air Transport command pilot, will be responsible for civil aviation questions referred to the defense department.

Yugoslav Report

Hungarians Hang Tildy's Son-in-Law

London, Dec. 7 (AP).—Victor Csornoky, son-in-law of former Hungarian President Zoltan Tildy, was executed by the Hungarians today for treason, the Yugoslav news agency Tanjug reported in a dispatch from Budapest.



Csornoky

Csornoky, 29, formerly was Hungary's envoy to Egypt. He once was stationed in Washington.

A people's court sentenced him November 15 to be hanged, holding that he had engaged in "traitorous activities" with United States and British agents. He also was convicted on charges of crimes against the people and black market currency dealings.

The Hungarian Supreme Court affirmed the death sentence yesterday. One of the charges was that he tried, with American help, to spirit Tildy out of Hungary. Tildy resigned August 2, soon after Csornoky's arrest.

and crew of 7 donned life vests and fastened safety belts. When the plane hit the water the life rafts broke loose and the plane's lights went out.

Only two life rafts could be saved and inflated.

"We had some food and some water," Calhoun said. "However, not knowing how long we would be in the rafts, they were rationed to last five days. We expected to be rescued within that time."

The rafts were built to hold only seven men, and survivors took turns in hanging over the sides. A chemical shark repellent kept the sharks away.

A Flying Fortress came over in the darkness and the life rafts fired flares. The bomber dropped a rescue boat and radioed the position, but contact with the life rafts was lost.

Then the Privateer found them and dropped smoke bombs to guide the Rendova.

Capt. James M. Lane of the Rendova said a rolling sea made the rescue difficult, but all 33 were taken aboard in an hour and a half operation.

Two were unconscious and all were in an advanced state of exhaustion.

Lane reported two of the victims went down with the plane, one died aboard one of the rafts Monday night, and the fourth jumped overboard little more than four hours before the rescuers arrived.

Legion to Ask $60 Pensions

Indianapolis, Dec. 7 (AP).—The American Legion will ask the Eighty-first Congress to vote pensions of $60 a month to veterans of both world wars when they reach the age of 60.

A subcommittee named to iron out conflicts in two resolutions adopted at the Legion convention in Miami this fall agreed today on a program.

The subcommittee recommended the pensions be paid to all veterans who served at least 90 days or were discharged for service-connected disability.

It also asked that the pensions be increased to $90 a month at 65 and be paid without regard to a veteran's income or any disability pension.

The report was announced by Leonard W. Esper of Springfield, Ill., after a two-day session at the Legion's national headquarters.

Other members of the subcommittee are Lawrence C. Knox of Wayne, Mich., and George Cleere of Montgomery, Ala.

U.S. Agrees To New Talks On Austria

Post Reporter

The State Department gave a quick and friendly response yesterday to the Austrian government's appeal to resume four-power negotiations for an Austrian treaty.

A note delivered to the Austrian Legation here welcomed the Austrian move, and expressed the hope "that a suitable basis might be found for the continuation of negotiations and the early conclusion of the treaty."

The American note made it clear that there could be a new attempt to write the long-delayed treaty as soon as all four powers were agreeable. A State Department spokesman said the resumed conference, if called, probably would meet in London, where the last negotiations failed in the spring.

French Reported to be Ready

In Paris, the Associated Press reported, a French Foreign Ministry official said France favored a reopening of the treaty talks. He added that the French government probably would consult with Great Britain and the United States before sending its formal reply to the Austrian appeal.

"If the Russians are agreeable there could be a meeting of the Foreign Ministers' deputies pretty soon," the French official said.

The British were reported yesterday to be equally favorable, and a formal acceptance from London was expected shortly. The only doubt in the western capitals and in Vienna was whether Russia would agree to a renewed conference, and whether the Soviet attitude would make a new meeting worth while.

Since the Berlin crisis began, there has been no indication here of the Soviet attitude toward Austrian treaty issues. The wartime allies have made six long-drawn-out attempts to settle the Austrian problem, and each one has failed.

Will Reveal Russia's Attitude

Now the western powers are ready to try again, if for no other purpose than to discover whether the Soviet attitude has changed.

The Austrian government itself is increasingly anxious to get the four-power occupation ended by a treaty. On Monday, the United Press reported from Vienna, Soviet occupation authorities called for another 1000 Austrian freight cars and several hundred locomotives as war reparations.

This was the very day the Austrians sent their appeal to the four powers, pleading for an end of the "harsh burden" of occupation, and pointing out that it had been "extremely disadvantageous for the recovery of the Austrian economy."

Court-Martial Rules Changed

new procedures outlined in the 1949 manual are based on that law and some largely technical changes decided upon by the Army itself.

The reforms are an outgrowth of widespread criticism of the wartime administration of military justice. At the nstitgaton of Army Secretary Kenneth S. Royall—then Undersecretary of War—a special committee of the American Bar Association, headed by Dean A. T. Vanderbilt of New York University, studied the entire problem.

Congressional committees and veterans organizations also investigated and the legislation finally passed forms the basis of the newly inaugurated system. Besides permitting GIs to sit on courts martial when demanded by an enlisted defendent, it provides:

Coercion in obtaining a confession is made a criminal offense.

Top commanders may no longer punish or reprimand members of courts martial for decisions to which they disagree.

Officers are made subject to trial by special courts martial which try lesser offenses and can inflict limited punishment. Heretofore, officers could be tried only by general courts martial, and therefore went unpunished at times when superiors felt the offense did not warrant the severe penalties imposed by general courts.

Powers of commanders to punish officers for minor offenses without a trial also were enlarged.

Law members of general courts—who serve as sort of trial judges—must be lawyers. On other courts martial, the defense counsel must be a qualified lawyer if the law member is one.

A final appellate court of review composed of military legal specialists is provided.

Army officers appointed in the Judge Advocate General's Department will be placed on a separate promotion list to assure greater freedom of influence from commanders.

Bomb Ray Talks Called Off At Military Heads' Request

San Francisco, Dec. 7 (U.P.).—A round-table discussion on the deadly effects of radiation spread from the atom bomb has been canceled at the request of military authorities in Washington, the chairman of the Radiological Society of North America announced today.

Dr. Robert Stone of the University of California Medical School said the society's officers had decided to abandon a symposium scheduled for Thursday because the discussion would "involve many military angles."

Dr. Stone denied that censorship or "coercion" influenced the society's decision.

Dr. Stone refused to disclose the identity of the military men who made the request. He said his decision was made after a discussion with Dr. Eugene Prendergass, Philadelphia, who was to have been chairman of the symposium and who received the long-distance telephone call from Washington.

Such a discussion in the society, whose actions and symposiums are open to the press, might lead to widespread publication of the answers of experts and scientists to the still unanswered question: "How effective a killer is A-bomb radiation?"

The topic of the symposium was to have been "How Much Radion Would be Required to Kill a Man?"

Col. James P. Cooney, USA, was invited to present a paper he had prepared for the Thursday session and it touched off a lively discussion today among society members.

Colonel Cooney, chief of the Army Medical Corps' special projects division, decried what he termed "hysteria" in the public mind over radiation and declared the dangers of atomic radiation had been overemphasized.

He declared that "unthinking fear" could make it impossible to lead men into military action in an area suspected of radioactive contamination.

Only 15 per cent of fatalities in the atom-bombing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki resulted from radiation, he contended.

"In Japan," he said, "there was no significant 'poisoning' of the ground by fission products, and yet many believe that the bomb is primarily a weapon which destroys by mysterious radioactivity."

The worst radiation, he said, would occur for only a few microseconds within a 2000-yard radius of the explosion. He said that immediately afterward it would be safe to enter an A-bombed area and rescue the thousands of injured.

2 Red Refugees See War Likely

Wiesbaden, Dec. 7 (NYHT.).—For five weeks two refugee Soviet officers have been exposed to an education about the Western way of life, conducted by the United States Air Force headquarters here. As a result, the two Russians today told American correspondents that the Soviet Union will probably start a war but she cannot win it.

Maj. Anatoly Barsov, 31-year-old Red air force pilot, and Lieut. Peter Pirogov, his 28-year-old navigator, flew out of the Russian zone of Austria last October.

They told correspondents the Russian government has been falsifying the picture of the world today through its state-controlled press and radio, to make "war propaganda" for Soviet citizens.

They paid tribute to the political potency of the State Department "Voice of America" broadcast to Russia. After hearing reports of the unsuccessful attempts by the Soviet consulate in New York City to abduct Oksana Kasenkina, they decide to take their chances with the West.

They told the press that 70 per cent of the Russians were against the Stalin regime.

State Aide Fears U. S. Codes Were Broken

whole thing, forgetting Mr. Hiss and Mr. Chambers, is the fact that these documents were taken out of the State Department in 1937 or 38, and to me that means that our codes were being read by foreign nations during the whole period. That, to me, is what is most important."

Commenting on Peurifoy's statement, Mundt observed that the 1937-38 period covered by the documents just preceded the August Hitler-Stalin non-aggression pact.

Mundt said it was conceivable that the Germans as well as the Russians knew the codes, and through them some of America's top secrets, before they entered the pact. He said it was also conceivable that Russia communicated the codes to Japan.

Earlier, Former Undersecretary of State Welles testifying in open session, told the committee some of the "pumpkin documents" could have been used to break our most secret codes.

Under questioning by Robert E. Stripling, chief investigator for the committee, Welles said all of the State Department messages before the committee were sent in code.

"Those marked 'Strictly confidential to the secretary' would be sent in one of the most secret codes then in use," he said.

Stripling asked whether possession of the documents shown Welles along with the originals in code would have enabled a person to break the code.

"In my judgment, decidedly yes," replied Welles.

The "on and off" open hearing of the House committee got under way 20 minutes late at 2:20 p. m. Representative Hebert promptly moved the committee go into executive session. His motion carried when Republican members failed to vote.

At 3:54 p. m., after a closed committee huddle, the hearings were again opened to the public. They closed again at 4 p. m., when the committee went into another executive session, sitting through the dinner hour.

Hebert told reporters he moved to close the session not only because questions of national security were involved, but because he disapproved of the committee's practice of proceeding before it has all of the facts.

"Popping off at the mouth is an awful disease," said the Louisiana Democrat.

Saying he will renew his motion until the committee has fully developed its case and is virtually ready to report, Hebert said he saw no need to examine Chambers again in public—"we have his story." He said he is willing to open the hearings again to give Hiss an opportunity to reply in public if he wants it.

"The committee has done a fine job in fereting out these documents," he said. "Now we ought to proceed in executive session to find out who was the thief."

At the outset of the open hearing, Stripling took the stand briefly and then called committee investigator William Wheeler, a former Secret Service operative, to identify the canned microfilm recovered at Chambers' farm.

Wheeler testified that he and another committee investigator accompanied Chambers to the Westminister farm at 10:45 p. m. Thursday.

He told how Chambers, with the aid of a flash light, led them to the pumpkin patch.

"He picked up several pumpkins and put them down," said Wheeler. "Then he pulled up one and said 'here is what we are looking for.' I reached in and pulled out the film."

Wheeler said he brought out three aluminum cartons and one small package of developed film wrapped in wax paper with a rubber hand around it.

Stripling testified that a "photographic technician" made prints of the developed film for the committee. The undeveloped film, he said, was processed at the Veterans Administration laboratories. Some of the prints from the latter were indistinct, "because of the age of the film," he said, and the FBI is now seeking to process clearer images.

Stripling next called to the stand P. M. Lewis, manager of the Washington office of the Eastern Kodak Co. Lewis said he was able to establish that one of the rolls of films was manufactured by the company in 1937.

Stripling next called Welles to the stand. Mundt told the former undersecretary the committee wished to establish whether publication of any of the recovered documents would be injurious to the public interest, and Stripling showed him three samples.

The first was datelined "Paris, Jan. 13, 1938" and signed "Bullitt" Stripling told the committee. It was marked "Strictly confidential to the Secretary."

Welles studied it briefly and then said:

"It is my conviction that without regard to the interest of any individual . . . publication at this time of this message would be prejudicial to the National interest."

Stripling asked if the "Strictly confidential" stamp meant they were classified as "top secrets" and Welles said that it did.

Stripling then handed him a second document bearing the same Paris dateline and the same signature and "confidential" stamp.

Welles examined it and said it was obviously the "second section" of the first document. Except for that fact, he said there was nothing in the second portion detrimental to the National interest.

Stripling next produced one of the 65 documents Chambers turned over during the Baltimore pretrial hearing of Hiss' slander charges.

Dated February 15, 1938, and signed "Hull," it was identified by Stripling as a telegram sent to Vienna.

Welles looked at it briefly and said: "I believe that this document if published now would be prejudicial to the Nation's interest."

There was no hint of the contents of the documents and Mundt enjoined photographers not to take close-up pictures of them.

Herbert asked if publication of the documents in 1938 would have been injurious. Welles replied that it would have "in the highest degree prejudicial and in the highest degree dangerous to the Nation's interest" to have made them public at that time.

Under further questioning, Welles said distribution of such documents in the State Department at that time would have been 'extremely restricted" and they were supposed to be kept "under lock and key."

"As soon as they were read by officials, they were supposed to be returned to a section of the files reserved for confidential documents," he added.

Welles said he "presumed" the State Department kept a record of those to whom each document was distributed and the committee later asked Peurifoy to find out if possible which officials received the purloined 1937-38 data.

Before leaving the stand, Welles said, that while he had passed on the documents as a private citizen, and to the best of his memory after 11 years, he felt "that in determining what is prejudicial the responsibility should clearly be borne by the present high officials of the State Department."

The committee then called Peurifoy. The Assistant Secretary of State, who has served in that post only since January 21, 1947, was handed the same three documents Welles was shown. Peurifoy said he agreed with Welles that it would not be in the national interest to make them public.

"Under our security regulations, no one is supposed to take out documents like that, even for purposes of home study," he said.

He added that it would be violating the law for anyone to knowingly have any of the documents or copies of them in his possession State Department."

Stripling then handed Peurifoy what he said were "three handwritten memoranda," saying:

"We are aware who wrote the memoranda from the handwriting. I would like to know whether it would have been unlawful to remove that type of memoranda from the department at hat time."

Stripling did not further identify these three documents. On Monday, Representative Richard M. Nixon (R., Calif.) charged that three of the documents in the possession of the committee were in the handwriting of Alger Hiss, in the opinion of a Government handwriting expert.

Peurifoy looked over the three memoranda and said:

"I would regard anyone making notes of what I have seen as certainly violating all the security regulations of the department."

Stripling asked if publication of the memoranda at this time would be prejudicial to our national interest.

"This might prove embarrassing to us in our relations to another nation," replied Peurifoy. "I don't think it would injure our national security . . . It might interfere with our conduct of foreign relations."

Nixon asked if Peuirfoy thought they should be made public and the witness said he did not.

Herbert asked if it couldn't be "assumed" that any individual preparing such notes "did it for some ulterior purpose."

"I think that's right, sir," Peurifoy replied.

Before leaving the stand, Peurifoy asked that copies of all the documents be turned over to the State Department.

Laws Involved in Spy Case Explored

By Raymond J. Blair

The whole subject of what laws are involved in the Hiss-Chambers case and whether anyone can still be punished for espionage under them was explored yesterday. The study came as the result of questions raised during the House investigation and because of a statement by Representative Richard M. Nixon (R., Calif.).

Government legal experts told a reporter that four specific pieces of espionage law apply to the case, which involves the alleged theft of secret State Department documents in 1937 and 1938, and that the person responsible probably is protected from prosecution for espionage by a three-year statute of limitations.

Representative Nixon, a member of the House Un-American Activities Subcommittee, indicated that his group is pressing its investigation because the statute of limitations probably protects the person responsible for the theft.

"The (New York) grand jury may find that there has been no crime committed on which it can hand down an indictment, but the American people still have a right to know about these reprehensible acts," he said.

"Unless it can be established that there was a conspiracy lasting until three years ago, then the statute of limitations probably has run out on the case," Nixon told a news conference.

Such a conspiracy, he added, is "terrifically hard to prove." The grand jury may be unable to indict even if it should catch someone "red-handed" as responsible for the theft, he said.

Nixon noted that possession of information affecting national defence was covered in the espionage laws and that possession of such information in the last three years is punishable. Microfilms of secret State Department documents were in the possession of Whittaker Chambers, an editor of Time magazine, until recently, when they were surrendered to an investigator of the House Subcommittee.

Legal experts told questioners that the statute applicable to espionage in peacetime is the Espionage Act of June 15, 1917. A revision of this act is being prepared by the Truman Administration, designed to toughen the law and eliminate loopholes.

The Espionage Act is listed as Title 50 of the United States Code. Sections 31, 32, 34 and 35 of Title 50 are applicable to espionage in peacetime. The law is as follows:

Section 31 provides for imprisonment of up to 10 years and a $10,000 fine for obtaining information about United States defense matters for the purpose of using it to "the injury of the United States or the advantage of any foreign nation," obtaining or copying any vital document or object or inducing another to obtain or copy it, willfully giving a defense secret to an unauthorized person retaining it against orders, or permitting it to be lost or stolen.

Section 32 punishes by 20 years' imprisonment the giving of a defense secret to a representative of a foreign power if the purpose is to aid that foreign power and harm the United States. This crime is punishable by death in wartime.

Section 34 provides that if two or more persons conspire to violate the statute, each of the parties to the conspiracy shall be given the same punishment provided for the offense they commit.

Section 35 states that anyone who conceals a person who has violated the Espionage Act or concerning whom there is "reasonable grounds" to suspect that he has violated or is about to violate the act can be punished by up to 10 years' imprisonment and a $10,000 fine.

The general statute of limitations applicable to non-capital criminal offenses applies to espionage in peacetime.

bers as saying he hid the microfilm first in a squash and then in a pumpkin on his Maryland farm because he feared they would fall into the hands of Hiss. He said he believed investigators for Hiss "had been around the farm several times within the last month." Asked why he finally selected a pumpkin, the UP said, Chambers replied: "I didn't expect they'd be there long."—Editor's note.]

Earlier, a source at the Federal courthouse said the Justice Department would make "every effort" to get quick indictments in the inquiry.

Union Purge Gains Hailed by Haywood

Chicago, Dec. 7 (AP).—Allan S. Haywood, national CIO vice president, today told the CIO Transport Workers Union that it has become "stronger than ever before by purging left-wing elements."

Haywood, whose speech was punctuated by cheers and confetti throwing by delegates, was a surprise speaker at TWU's sixth biennial convention.

Warns of "Termites"

Haywood, administering a mass oath of office to the newly elected officers and board and to delegates, said:

"You could not find the ideological boys when the going was tough. Let no Communist party or Socialist party or termites divide your union."

He said that the results of yesterday's election, which swept out left-wing elements and renamed Michael J. Quill as union president, had "given new hope to democratic forces everywhere.

"Our job is to organize the unorganized and to hell with the ideologies. If ever a labor party comes to America, it will not come from a messiah, it will come for labor's experience."

Prior to the addresses, delegates cast resolutions urging repeal of the Taft-Hartley law, opposing use of injunctions in strikes, and asking unions to work against State antilabor laws.

Meanwhile, Quill went to work in the wake of his victory to rid his union of all left-wing personnel.

General Counsel Fired

The newly elected executive board—dominated by Quill men—held its first meeting in a convention lull and took these actions;

Fired Harry Sacher of New York, general counsel of the TWU and attorney for some of the 12 men indicted in New York on Communist charges. The post pays $12,000 a year.

Hired John F. O'Donnell of New York to replace Sacher. O'Donnell, a staunch Quill supporter, is also attorney for New York Local 100.

Fired Will Quaytman, editor of the TWU publication and union publicity director. no replacement was named. the action also eliminated Quaytman's office staff.

Decided to prepare new reports replacing those of the former officers and executive board.

The left wing, however, did not go down without a fight. John Lopez, of Brooklyn, N. Y., head of the union's utilities division, voiced a threat to take his division out of the union. He said:

"There are other places for us to go if you persist in shutting us up. There's a hole in the CIO utility workers and there's a hell of a big spot in the AFL."

Later, however, the utility division delegates repudiated the Lopez threat. Lopez himself announced the result of their action.

This is NOT bad reception!

Fire destroyed a frame dairy building and dairy equipment early yesterday on the 231-acre farm of Arthur Johnson, 10 miles west of Gaithersburg, Md.

The blaze, which firemen said apparently started in the boiler room, was extinguished by the Gaithersburg-Washington Grove Volunteer Fire Department under Capt. Wesley Briggs after an hour's fight. Loss was estimated at $2000.

Cathedral School Head to Retire From Post in '50

Miss Mabel B. Turner will retire June 30, 1950, as principal of the National Cathedral School for Girls, Delos J. Needham, chairman of the school's governing board announced yesterday.

Miss Turner

Miss Turner, in a letter to the board announcing her decision, pointed out that she will have completed 21 years as principal as of her resignation's effective date and that she feels "a change of leadership at this time is wise."

The board, in accepting Miss Turner's resignation, expressed gratitude for her contribution to the school's success and regret over her decision to resign, Needham said.

announced. He opposed any change in the 50-50 shipping arrangement, declaring it is necessary to keep a strong United States Merchant Marine.

Hoffman is abroad, but Acting ECA Administrator Howard Bruce denied any intent to damage this country's merchant fleet.

On his orders, ECA made public Hoffman's letter to Bridges, chairman of the congressional committee watching the agency's operations. It was dated December 3.

Mellen said in an interview that ECA wants to allow foreign ships to haul a bigger percentage of aid cargo in order to take advantage of lower costs. The maritime official strongly opposed any change.

"The United States merchant fleet must have this continued guarantee that it will get its share of this shipping, or we will become a second-rate maritime power without a chance of meeting military shipping needs if another war develops."

Transamerica Demands Reserve Board Drop Credit Monopoly Charge

By The Associated Press

Transamerica Corporation demanded yesterday that the Federal Reserve Board drop its charge that the big bank holding company monopolizes credit in five western States.

The demand brought a delay in the start of the corporation's trial on the complaint that its stock ownership in some 600 banks and branch banks violates the 34-year-old Clayton Antitrust Act.

R. M. Evans, Federal Reserve Board member designated as hearing officer in the case, announced that he will ask the full seven-member board to rule on a series of Transamerica requests after oral arguments Saturday. The requests include four motions to dismiss the board's complaint.

Evans set resumption of the hearing for 10 days after the board makes its decision, probably not before January 1.

Samuel B. Stewart, jr., Transamerica's chief counsel, charged in a statement that the antitrust action has "the sole purpose of protecting (Transamerica's) competitors from strong competition."

Stewart demanded dismissal of four grounds: (1) The board lacks authority to proceed against Transamerica; (2) the action is unconstitutional because the company has no opportunity to subpoena defense witnesses (3) if tried at all, the company should be tried in California where it does business; (4) the board failed to make a clear statement of charges as required by law.

Stewart renewed two requests which the board already had denied.

Deficit May Bring Higher Postal Rates

By The Associated Press

Congress will be asked to boost mail rates for newspapers, magazines, catalogues and other categories next year, Postmaster General Donaldson announced yesterday.

Donaldson told newsmen the sweeping increases—on all except first class mail—will be sought:

1. To counteract the Postoffice Department's expected all-time record deficit of 550 million dollars, which is more than one third of the deficit forecast for the entire Government's operations in the 1949 fiscal year, ending next June 30.

2. To help offset the $450-a-year pay raises authorized by Congress for 500,000 postal workers.

Donaldson made his announcement after conferring with President Truman at the White House. He said the President is "not acquainted" with the situation yet, but "he will be."

Donaldson said increases will be asked for second-class mail, newspapers and magazines; third class, circulars and advertising; fourth class, parcel post; and special services, such as money orders.

The proposed rate jumps would be over and beyond increases already authorized by the Republican-controlled Eightieth Congress last June. These rates, which become effective January 1, affect nearly all classes of mail except first and second.

Actor Arrested

Errol Flynn Kicked Him, Cop Claims

New York, Dec. 7 (AP).—Debonair Errol Flynn, the screen's master swordsman and two-fisted battler, was arrested today—charged with kicking a cop on the shin.

At that, police had to go to the 38-year-old actor's suite at the Savoy Plaza Hotel to arrest him after he failed to appear at a Magistrate's Court hearing on a third-degree assault charge.

"I overslept," he told Magistrate Doris I. Byrne before she reinstated $500 bail which another magistrate had ordered Flynn to forfeit after his nonappearance.

Then Magistrate Byrne set the case for Wednesday, pointed to Flynn, and said: "Be there."

"This is the worst public appearance I've ever made," Flynn told an officer in court.

Everything started early today, with police giving this account:

Flynn and Robert Graham Wahn, 38, a film publicity man, were riding in a cab which was stopped by patrolmen Joseph Berceles and Joseph Gardner because they thought the driver had an unusually youthful appearance. (It later developed he is 22.)

When the driver got out to show his credentials, Wahn leaped out and allegedly used abusive language, resulting in everybody going to the lockup.

There, Berceles claimed, Flynn kicked him in the shin while they were walking along. Flynn was charged with third-degree ssault, Wahn with disorderly conduct.

Policewoman's Curiosity Leads to Seizure Of 5 Boys Here in Series of Housebreaking

A policewoman's curiosity yesterday had brought about the roundup of a gang of five youthful alleged housebreakers, four of them juveniles.

One of the five was Thomas Crawford, 20, of 233 10th st. ne., who was charged with housebreaking and held in $1500 bond for action of the grand jury.

The policewoman is Pvt. Jacobeth Novak of the Women's Bureau. She and Pvt. J. A. Stewart of the Sixth Precinct drove to the Rosedale playground, 17th & Galessts. ne., Saturday night and she noticed three boys standing on a corner beside a pile of clothing.

When Mrs. Novak and Stewart approached, one boy fled and the other two put up a fight, but were finally subdued and taken to the Ninth Precinct Station.

One of the two was Crawford. The other was a 17-year-old boy who was charged with housebreaking and turned over to his parents pending Juvenile Court action.

Police learned the third boy was named "Skippy." When "Skippy," 15, was finally apprehended, he implicated two other 15-year-old boys.

Police estimated that in the past three months the youthful gang has stolen at least $1000 in cash and valuables. Yesterday, police had located 11 homes broken into by the gang and recovered clothes valued at about $400.

According to police, a short time before Mrs. Novak and Stewart came along Saturday the boys had broken into the home of Mrs. Hazel Hallett, at 1907 D st. ne., and stolen the clothes seen piled on the sidewalk.

In one case, police said, the boys entered the home of Mrs. Ella Phelan, at 649 Morris pl. ne. Mrs. Phelan was in the basement washing clothes. Her husband was in the living room. The boys snatched Mrs. Phelan's pocketbook containing $75 from the dining room table and escaped it could have published the hundreds of complaints it has received against sharp practices by auto dealers.

Instead, he pointed out, the subcommittee investigated certain cases, and held public hearings on them. He said NADA was invited by telegram of Nov. 11 to send a spokesman to the hearings, but that no reply was received.

Reddan cited Macy's earlier explanation that the investigation would not be extended to other parts of the country, because of lack of funds, and the fact that the subcommittee's powers end with this Congress.

Scheer Death Clew Studied

Police began a microscopic study yesterday of a 2-by-4 plank which may possibly help solve the strange death Saturday of Charles Scheer, 48-year-old clothier.

The piece of wood, 30 inches long, was found in the clothing merchant's store, 1100 North Capitol st., where he was discovered ill a week ago Monday. He died five days later of a fractured skull without being able to tell police what had happened to him.

Still being sought by police yesterday was the wallet, with an undetermined amount of money, which Scheer usually carried. It was missing when he was found in his store.

Robbery was one theory being considered by police. Doctors have said it would have been possible for Scheer to have been struck on the head, to have lost consciousness, and then to become conscious without recalling he had been attacked.

E. R. Harriman Chosen to Head Red Cross

By the United Press

The Red Cross yesterday named E. Roland Harriman, New York banker and railroad executive, to head its 1949 campaign to raise $60,000,000.

The fund drive will be held next March.

Red Cross President Basil O'Connor said Harriman's "outstanding business ability and his distinguished service as a Red Cross volunteer" will do much toward achieving the organization's financial goal.

Harriman now is a member of the Red Cross' board of governors, which set the $60,000,00 fund goal. He served as wartime manager of the organization's North Atlantic Area.

While holding that post, he was named chairman of an advisory committee in 1946 to study Red Cross organization. The committee's recommendations ultimately resulted in greater participation by local chapters in Red Cross affairs.

month ago. This attack also took place in the rear of Francis Junior High School.

According to police, the rapist forced the escort at gunpoint to lie on his back while he attacked the girl. After the assault, police said, the escort was robbed of a billfold containing $6.

He was also positively identified by a 35-year-old woman who said he tried to attack her Friday night at Georgia ave. and Barry pl. nw.

The woman said the man was scared off when she screamed and attracted the attention of several passing motorists.

Police said Massey is married but is separated from his wife and five children. He has been employed as a laborer by a local contractor. He has no previous sex record.

Capt. Mark Raspberry, head of the park police, said Massey was arrested by Pvts. Gertrude E. Wilson and Walter R. McEwen of the park police, who had been stationed at the Banneker playground in plain clothes.

He said their attention was drawn to Massey when they noticed him loitering in the playground and saw he was dressed similarly to the man who had raped the 14-year-old girl there three nights earlier.

Raspberry said park police have maintained a constant vigil in areas frequented by the rapist since the series of assaults.

Massey, who denied guilt in any of the cases, was held without bond and will be arraigned in Municipal Court today.

City Report Delay Costs Pastor $25

Rev. Andrew R. Bird, of the Church of the Pilgrims, 22d and P sts. nw., forfeited $25 collateral yesterday on a charge of failing to report a marriage ceremony within a 10-day period.

Seven other clergymen appeared in the Municipal Court offices of Assistant Corporation Counsel Clark F. King. They were summoned there on complaints of the Marriage License Bureau that their marriage reports were late in arriving.

All seven were released without being charged.

Henceforth ministers will not be served "summons" to appear. Instead, confidential letters will be dispatched "requesting" their presence.

More Clergymen to Appear

In announcing the new method, King said:

"I originally intended to send out the letters. However, I lacked the stenographic help. Now, a stenographer is to be sent to me from the main office for the specific purpose of typing out the letters. There will be no prior announcement of the hearings."

He said that 15 clergymen will appear Friday.

It is the second time within a year that the marriage licensing clerks have complained of delayed filings. King said that 100 ministers are involved in the 140 "apparent" violations.

Dr. Bird explained the report of the marriage was given to a friend who mislaid it. However, King pointed out that Dr. Bird had forfeited $5 in May on the same charge.

The ministers who appeared yesterday and were not charged were Rev. Edward H. Pruden, 3029 Ordway st. nw., pastor of the First Baptist Church, which President Truman attends; Rev. E. L. Harrison, 1223 Irving st. ne., Shiloh Baptist Church; Rev. Charles W. Wood, St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Rock Creek; Rev. James H. Miers, 2715 13th st. nw., Fourth Presbyterian Church; Rev. John J. Queally, 1419 Gallatin st. nw., Church of the Transfiguration; Rev. Harry V. Porter, 817 C st. sw., Westminster Memorial Presbyterian Church, and Rev. William L. Turley, 1629 13th st. nw., Mt. Gilead Baptist Church.

Rev. Smallwood E. Williams, 1328 Montello ave. ne., was due to appear but was reported out of town.

In declining to prosecute the seven ministers, King said the delays in filing could probably be explained in handling of the mails and possible mistakes in filing procedures at the courts.

J. Austin Latimer, attorney for six of the clergymen, sharply criticised the procedure. He termed the proceedings a "most embarrassing experience" for the ministers and complained of "unfair publicity."

Collateral Need Questioned

He said he doubted the necessity of forcing them to post collateral.

King replied that cases of the same sort handled earlier this year should have served as warnings since they were attended with widespread publication. He disclaimed any intent to embarrass, stating:

"I have only these records of the District Court clerk to go on and where they indicate a violation it is my duty to investigate."

Later, he pointed out the danger in delayed filings. He said the clergyman involved might die or be transferred to a distant post in the meantime. It would be extremely difficult to prove absolutely that the marriage had been performed under these circumstances, he said.

He denied "picking" ministers to prosecute. They would be heard in the order of the marriage licenses issued and not reported on, he said.

Experts Told

Meters Cut City Parking Violations

Parking meters have cut down overtime parking violations by 12 per cent in cities of all sizes, traffic and highway experts were told here yesterday.

The Highway Research Board, holding its twenty-eighth annual convention at the National Academy of Sciences, 2101 Constitution ave. nw., considered means of relieving congestion caused by urban parking.

R. H. Burrage and S. T. Hitchcock, of the Public Roads Administration, cited a survey to show "overtime parking amounted to 32 per cent of those parking at curbs with time restrictions but no meters."

"Only 20 per cent were overtime parkers at metered spaces," they reported.

The study covered eight cities using meters and 15 using time restrictions without meters, in six population groups from less than 25,000 to more than 500,000.

The committee on parking, headed by T. M. Matson, Yale University Bureau of Traffic, was one of eight groups meeting during the day. More than 500 traffic and highway engineers from all parts of the United States are attending.

Presentation of three national awards will highlight today's session.

First is the Bartlett award, won last year by H. S. Fairbank, of Washington, "for distinguished service in highway engineering during the past year." Two men will be cited for "outstanding achievement in the field of highway research," and another will receive the Research Board award for presentation of the best paper at last year's meeting.

A report of yesterday's traffic conference, embracing pertinent suggestions made by six parking specialists, will be made by the Research Board.

The meeting will continue through Friday.

Bay Span Due in 2 Years, 8 Months

The new Chesapeake Bay bridge from Annapolis to the Eastern Shore, with construction work just getting under way, is expected to take two years and eight months to complete, it was revealed yesterday.

Robert M. Reindollar, chairman of the Maryland State Roads Commission, said that bonds to finance the bridge have been sold, contracts have been and are being awarded, and construction of approaches and foundations is under way.

He told the advisory board of the District chapter of American Automobile Association at a luncheon meeting yesterday at the Mayflower Hotel that present engineering estimates call for completion of the bridge late in 1951.

The bridge, Reindollar said, will be paid for by toll charges, which will be approximately the same as those now paid by car owners for the ferry trip between Matapeake and Sandy Point, Md. He said the tolls might be reduced after the first year.

Reindollar asserted the new bridge, plus another to be constructed over the lower reaches of the Delaware River at New Castle, Del., will enable motorists to bypass all large population centers in driving South from New York City. The by-passed cities will include Washington, Baltimore, Wilmington, Trenton, Annapolis and Philadelphia, he said.

Diabetes Mass Test Method Developed

The United States Public Health Service is perfecting techniques and machinery for diabetes screening tests on an assembly line basis, it was disclosed here yesterday.

The method will permit simultaneous testing of 40 persons, with results available in five minutes, according to Dr. Hugh L. C. Wilkerson, of PHS.

Purpose of the systematized, blood-sugar analysis tests, he said, will be to expedite future mass screening of large population areas for the estimated one million persons who unknowingly have diabetes.

Dr. Wilkerson, who pioneered development of the recently perfected physician's kit for individual five-minute screening tests, said the mass processing will merely put the individual tests on a multiple basis.

He spoke here yesterday at the D. C. Medical Society auditorium in afternoon and night programs sponsored by the Diabetes Association of the District of Columbia. The meetings were the beginning of an educational campaign instituted by the association of physicians and laymen to uncover an estimated 7000 unknown diabetics in the District.

Although initial results with the blood-sugar analysis tests are "too inconclusive" to rule out present screening tests by urinalysis, Dr. Wilkerson said, early statistics show that "between 20 to 30 per cent of suspect cases are missed" when urinalysis is the sole test used.

He further emphasized that the screening tests pick out only those persons with high blood-sugar content. Final diagnosis of diabetes, he said, must be determined by present standard laboratory techniques.

The mass testing procedure, Dr. Wilkerson told reporters, requires an automatic machine of 40-test-tube capacity to heat and mix reagent pills with blood samples of persons being tested.

For such mass scale screening as the District's tuberculosis X-ray campaign in which more than 500,000 persons were examined, Dr. Wilkerson said the diabetes tests could be completed in about the same length of time (about six months).

James Cheverton, chairman of the lay society of the District Diabetes Association, said yesterday that his group is considering sponsoring some kind of diabetes detection tests early next year.

Proof Possible?

Immortality Study Urged By Dr. Rhine

Need of research funds and public acceptance of their purposes are all that block parapsychologist from proving or disproving immortality, a Washington audience was told last night.

The task of settling the age-old controversy of whether a man's spirit dies with his physical self could be explored successfully on scientific grounds by "sympathetic investigators," Dr. J. B. Rhine, noted parapsychologist declared.

Speaking to more than 500 persons at the Interior Department auditorium, he proposed that a foundation be set up to finance and encourage such studies.

Dr. Rhine spoke at the invitation of the Society of Parapsychology, formed here last summer to study scientifically things generally recognized as unscientific.

The world was not ready for a scientific investigation of the claims of spirit mediums in the days of Sir Oliver Lodge and Sir Conan Doyle, Dr. Rhine declared.

"Today, though the world seems less interested, the scientific foundations are at hand," he said.

These "foundations," he said, are the scientific findings of tests conducted in laboratories like his own at Duke University, Durham, N. C., with card tests, dice rolling and similar investigations.

He estimated that evidence could be amassed in 10 years to prove or disprove spirit survival by studies unhampered by financial restrictions.

First order of the project, said Dr. Rhine, would be a world-wide survey of the claims of "all signs, symptoms and clews" that the spirit survives physical death.

A follow-up phase would call for thorough investigation of the claims "by a small forum of sympathetic persons." This group would consist of mediums, trained scientists and practical psychologists, he proposed.

Post investigations, said Dr. Rhine, have failed largely because the investigators had no scientific base for their studies, and because "they were undertaken by hostile minds."

Dr. Rhine blamed the general decline of interest in spirit investigation since World War I days to "the shift in emphasis that has come with rapid advance of the physical sciences."

On the other hand, he said, studies of the mind and the question of whether a personality can servive death "have been sat on by orthodoxies, loyalties and traditions, faiths and beliefs, and other anarchronisms."

Advances in parapsychology (the scientific study of unexplained phenomena), he said, have reached the point "that it is like we are looking over a ledge and saying, 'There is something there, surely.'"

GWU Given Cancer Funds

Checks representing grants of $45,000 for cancer research were presented yesterday to Dr. Cloyd H. Marvin, president of George Washington University, in his office at 2003 G st. nw.

The funds were for research by the Warwick Memorial Clinic, which is affiliated with the university.

Eliot Wadsworth, vice president of the District division of the American Cancer Society, presented a check for $20,000—the largest single grant ever made by the division. The money was part of funds raised here in last year's national cancer campaign.

Douglas Poteat, executive vice president of the American Cancer Society, presented, on national headquarters behalf, a check for $12,500, first payment on a $25,000 grant.

Both grants will be used to provide facilities for cancer research projects under way at the clinic. This will include:

Hiring of a sythetic chemist for a radioactive tracer laboratory under direction of Dr. Paul K. Smith, professor of pharmacology at the GW School of Medicine.

Employment of a tissue culture technician to screen chemicals in studies of malignant cells.

Purchase of supplies and equipment and maintenance of four beds at GW University Hospital for cancer case studies.

Commissioners to Meet

Frederick, Md., Dec. 7 (AP).—The Western Shore County Commissioners Association, including Montgomery and Prince Georges County representatives, will meet here tomorrow to elect officers and discuss pending legislation to come before the General Assembly next month.

One subject listed for action at the annual meeting is the school construction program. The commissioners are expected to support a proposal to double the State incentive fund for new school buildings.

Fruit Growers' Proposal

Winchester, Va., Dec. 7 (Spl.).—Members of the Frederick County Fruit Growers Association have recommended that when the Virginia State Horticultural Society meets December 15-17 at Roanoke, plans be formulated for cutting down and destroying old and diseased apple and peach trees "that are becoming a menace to the production of good quality fruit."

A survey of the number of commercial apple and peach trees, by variety and age groups, is to be made this winter by Henry Taylor, State agricultural statistician, it was reported.

By Fast Freezing

Suspension Of Life Is Claimed

Life has been quick-frozen into a state of suspended animation and safely revived, a St. Louis scientist disclosed here yesterday.

Father Luyet

The experiments, so far, have been confined to relatively small organisms but the process could theoretically be applied to human beings. The scientist, the Rev. Basile J. Luyet, professor of biology at the St. Louis University, however, pointed out that existing laboratory techniques do not envision human experiment.

Father Luyet said he and his associates have successfully frozen plant and animal life by immersing them in liquid air or liquid nitrogen, and rivived them without injury. The largest organisms used, small "vinegar ells," have been kept in a state of suspended animation for more than six hours and then brought back to life.

The duration of suspended animation is not important, Father Luyet stated, if the freezing and reviving processes are properly performed. "We have no reason to believe that suspension for six years would have any different results than suspension for six hours."

Fast-Freezing Does Trick

Success of the experiments are based on the extremely rapid freezing process, at a rate approaching 40,000 degrees fahrenheit per second, he said. At this speed, the range of crystallization temperatures, not far below the freezing point, is "skipped over" and permits living matter to be solidified without destroying life.

It is the crystallization process, the temperature range where water forms tiny ice crystals, that destroys living tissue, Father Luyet said. By rapidly freezing and rewarming organisms through this "dangerous range" we have been successful in our experiments.

Father Luyet said that the velocity which material can be cooled depends directly on the amount of moisture the element contains and its mass.

Factors capable of reducing the velocity requirements are being studied, he said, and may contribute in rendering the ultrarapid cooling method available for practical use in the near future.

Father Luyet spoke before refrigerating engineers assembled at the Statler Hotel for a four-day convention. Their society has worked with Father Luyet and his associates in providing technical and financial assistance.

Bachelor Girl 'Mother' of 2

A bachelor girl with two adopted children yesterday strongly advised others to follow her lead.

Ann Barley, author of "Patrick Calls Me Mother," told of her experiences with a "daughter" and "son" at the Washington Art Club's New Book Fair, now in progress at 2017 I st. nw.

Patrick is a 3-year-old French-turned-American child whom she went abroad to adopt in 1945. Later, she became the "mother" of an orphaned French girl, 9 months younger than the boy.

"If anyone asks me about adopting a child," she said, "I recklessly advise them to go right ahead."

The author said she had attended a dinner party "on P st.," where she met a Dutch government official who described the plight of war babies in Europe.

"The next thing I knew I was on my way abroad to adopt a son," Miss Barley said.

Socialists Call AMA 'Lobby'; Protest Tax Exemption

By the United Press

The Socialist Party yesterday asked the Treasury Department to revoke the American Medical Association's tax exemption on grounds that AMA is "lobbying" against Federal health insurance.

The Socialists based their demand on the medical group's recently announced plan to assess its 140,000 members $25 each to finance a $3,500,000 campaign for health education and to oppose what it calls "socialized medicine."

President Truman is expected to recommend enactment of compulsory, prepaid health insurance in his State of the Union message to the Eighty-first Congress. Senator James E. Murray (D., Mont.), long-time sponsor of the program, has predicted it will pass after a hot fight.

Socialist Party National Secretary Harry Fleischman said the AMA plan "is lobbying pure and simple" and not educational, as the AMA claimed.

"It is absurd," he said, "to grant tax exemption for contributions to an AMA fund to influence legislation and not give equal tax exemption for contributions to the Socialist Party to fight for that same legislation." He added that the Socialist Party does not believe any political contributions should be tax-free.

"Certainly education is needed by the AMA," Fleischman said. "These political doctors should study the facts of socialized medicine in such countries as New Zealand and Great Britain. In both countries, while the vast majority of doctors originally opposed socialized medicine, they now are cooperating with it actively and wholeheartedly. They realize that it has aided the people's health, and incidentally brought higher incomes to the medical profession."

Slate Is Approved By Charter Group

The Montgomery County charter committee last night unanimously approved a county council slate presented by a nominating subcommittee.

The action was taken at the charter committee's annual dinner at the Indian Spring Country Club in Silver Spring, Md.

Formal introduction of the seven candidates, comprising the slate, selected by the charter group's nominting committee, highlighted the affair.

Those introduced were: P. G. Ligon, Brinklow; Augustus R. Selbey, Germantown; Dr. Lewis Meriam, Kensington; J. Douglas Bradshaw, Takoma Park; Mrs. Dorothy Hamstead, Chevy Chase; Frederic P. Lee, Bethesda, and Thomas C. Kelley, Darnestown.

Allen H. Gardner, chairman of the subcommittee presenting the nominations, replied to criticism that no Silver Spring resident had been included on the slate.

Two of the seven candidates, Bradshaw and Mariam, live in the Fifth Council District in which Silver Spring is located, he pointed out.

"Charter foes are hoping to divide us, but they will not succeed," he added.

The gathering was termed a "victory dinner" because the charter, which the committee had promoted, was approved in the November 2 election.

Toastmaster was James V. Bennett, a member of the charter committee board, who is director of the Federal Bureau of Prisons.

Treasurer Evarts J. Wagg reported charter campaign expenses amounted to $10,000. A finance committee report asserted that $2000 is needed by December 15 to defray expenses of the January 6 council elections.

Elected unanimously as charter committee directors for the coming year were James B. Bennett, William Dahl, Thomas C. Kelley, Frederic P. Lee, Edward L. Stock and P. Y. K. Howat.

Charles K. Davies, Jr., To Run as Independent

Charles K. Davies, Jr., Bethesda and Gaithersburg attorney, yesterday announced his candidacy for Montgomery County Council.

Davies

He will run independently of the slate of seven council candidates supported by the Montgomery County Charter Committee.

Other independent candidates are: Mrs. Alma T. Opal, Takoma Park housewife, and Romeo Horad of Silver Spring.

A native of Washington, Davies is married and the father of three children. He has lived in Gaithersburg since 1927. He is vice president of the Gaithersburg Volunteer Fire Department and town solicitor for Gaithersburg.

Davies said he had been suggested to the charter committee's nominating group, and when he was not among those chosen, friends urged him to run as an independent.

James River Expected Back to Normal Today

Richmond, Va., Dec. 7 (AP).—S. S. Schworm, chief meteorologist at the United States Weather Bureau here, said the James River would be down to normal level, 8 feet, some time early tonight. The river was in flood stage yesterday.

Meanwhile, the State Highway Department said two primary highways and several secondary roads remained closed. Primary routes blocked were U. S. 301 south of Bowling Green and Route 207 west of Bowling Green between U. S. Routes 1 and 301. These were expected to be opened late today.

The secondary roads closed were in the James River area. A department spokesman said total damage to the State's flooded roads and bridges was less than $25,000. The damage consisted mainly of washed-out fills on bridge approaches.

Charterites Celebrate Their Victory . . .

The Washington Post

THEY REMEMBER NOVEMBER—Members of the Montgomery County Charter Committee staged their annual banquet last night at Indian Spring Country Club. This year it was different, however. They had a victory to celebrate—the victory charterites won at the polls in November. Among the celebrants were (from left) P. G. Ligon of Brinklow, Md., and Mrs. Dorothy S. Himstead of Chevy Chase, Md., both candidates for the Montgomery County Council, and Norman B. Ames, charter committee president. Congratulations were in order all around mittee's field division including several precinct captains and an unknown number of precinct workers," Morgan said last night. He added that it certainly would not hopelessly cripple their cause and that he was relieved to get the ruling so that Federal employes "would not be out on a limb."

Plummer Shearin, executive director of the County Charter Committee, said he did not want to "minimize the great job these people have been doing. We certainly can not make as good a campaign without them."

He pointed out that the slate of candidates would not be altered by the ruling as none of them were Federally employed.

'Typewriter' Hearing Held

The Federal Government has agreed to furnish free typewriters for use in taking Civil Service examinations—if Congress provides necessary funds. That was the outcome of a Senate Civil Service Committee hearing yesterday, called by Senator William Langer (R., N. Dak.), in an attempt to iron out the problem of stenographers in renting typewriters.

Langer said he held the hearing after receiving many complaints from Civil Service job applicants that they had to either furnish their own typewriter or pay a $2 fee for the use of a machine provided by a local typewriter dealer.

"Many of these typists are very low on funds, and there's no earthly reason why the Civil Service Commission should not bear the cost of machines for these people," Langer said.

He added that the Government furnished free typewriters for exam takers during the war, and that it cost the Government only a few thousand dollars annually to rent them from dealers on a contract basis.

Edgar Byram, Chief of the Office Services Division of the Civil Service Commission, testified that the problem was simply a question of appropriations.

C. M. Smith Heads Civic Federation

Charles M. Smith, 40, of 2710 N. 25th st., last night was unanimously elected president of the Arlington Civic Federation.

The federation also elected T. Oscar Smith, Justice Department attorney of 817 S. Orme st., as vice president; William Tickle, Capital Transit Co., accident analyist of 4614 N. 3d st., as treasurer, and picked five executive committee members.

President-elect Smith, who takes office next month, is assistant director of the Southern Regional Council, a foundation for cultural and educational development of the South. He is chairman of the northern Virginia regional planning committee; a member of the Arlington Citizen's Committee for School Improvements and of the Arlington Better Government League.

Elected to the federation's executive committee were: Robert Cox, Oscar R. Lebeau, Malcom Miller, outgoing president, Mrs. Ruby G. Simpson and William G. Watt.

Mrs. Simpson was doubly honored last night for her 20 years service with the group.

She received the federation's highest award—membership in the "Order of Distinguished and Meritorious Endeavor," the fifth person to be so honored, and was elected to receive The Evening Star trophy for civic contribution.

Adopted by the Federation was a resolution urging Arlington County to "revamp its entire tax billing" system.

Robert Cox, chairman of the group's revenues and expenditures committee, said county residents were given only five days in which to pay their taxes between the time bills were mailed to them and the December 5 deadline.

New School Under Way, Board Told

Alexandria School Superintendent T. C. Williams told the city's school board last night that one new school is already under construction, and plans for two more are nearing completion. Bids on one school addition and one remodeling project will be opened Friday, he said.

Farthest along in Alexandria's $2,837,500 school building program is the James Fickle Elementary School in the northeast section, already under construction, he said.

Bids on contracts for an addition to Maury School and the rehabilitation of MacArthur School will be opened at 2 p. m. Friday at the school board office, he reported.

Plans for a new Negro high school are almost ready to be submitted to bids, Williams said.

The city building inspector will receive plans for a new elementary school at Parfairfax on January 15.

Williams said the plans for an addition to Mount Vernon School have been delayed pending a decision by the city council on closing one block of Mount Ida.

Commission to Meet

Richmond, Va., Dec. 7 (AP).—A special legislative commission to investigate the coordination of police functions in Virginia will hold its organizational meeting at the State Capitol December 15, the Division of Statutory Research and Drafting said today.

A resolution of the General Assembly directed the commission to "consider the coordination of the functions of the Department of State Police, the police functions of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, and the police functions of the several counties of the State."

A report is to be made to the Governor by September 1, 1949.

Store Pay Talks Resume Today

Representatives of management and labor are expected to resume negotiations today in the threatened strike by 70 office workers at Goldenberg's Department Store, 7th and K sts. nw.

The Goldenberg unit of the Office Employes International Local No. 2, AFL, voted Monday to strike unless management met their demands for a contract. Demands originally included a 15-cent-an-hour wage raise and employment security provisions, according to W. Robert Probey, business manager of the local.

City-wide membership of the local met late into the night at the Hamilton Hotel to consider the Goldenberg unit vote to strike.

Theodore W. Peyser, attorney and negotiator for the store, declined to state what management had offered. He observed, however, that he expected a settlement today.

So. Pacific Strike Called

By the United Press

Officials of the Brotherhood of Firemen and Enginemen announced last night they have called a strike against the Southern Pacific Railroad for December 15.

The announcement was made by Union President D. B. Robertson. He said a special union committee authorized the walkout last week.

Robertson said the strike is a result of failure of the union and the railroad to reach agreement on "several hundred" grievances arising over differences in contract interpretation.

The strike would force a complete shutdown of the sprawling Southern Pacific in five Western States—Oregon, California, Texas, Nevada and Arizona.

[The brotherhood announcement is expected to start machinery of the National Mediation Act pertaining to railroad labor disputes. President Truman, under the act, would be expected to appoint an emergency fact-finding board to report within 30 days unless the time is extended. No strike could take place in the meantime.—Editor's note.]

Robertson said the union represents about 3000 Southern Pacific employes. He said the strike, however, would force all employes of the company to stop work.

Trailer Camp To Get License

A writ of mandamus directing Prince Georges County Commissioners to issue a license for operation of the White Hall Manor, Inc., a trailer camp near White Hall, Md., was issued yesterday by Judge John B. Gray, jr., in circuit court at Upper Marlboro, Md.

The County Commissioners in August refused to grant a permit for the operation of the trailer camp. Nicholas Orem, jr., attorney for the corporation, said at the time of the hearing that the commissioners do not have authority to refuse the permit since the land is not located in zoned property where the board would have discretion in granting zoning.

The suit to compel issuance of the permit was filed against the commissioners sitting as a county board of health. Orem contended that the only requirement which could be passed upon by the commissioners was whether the camp meets the health requirements of the State law.

Judge Gray in his written opinion agreed with Orem that the commissioners are required to issue the permit and ordered the mandamus issued. It was served upon the commissioners yesterday.

A group of residents and the attorney for the school board opposed the issuance of the permit, contending it would bring many more children into the county schools and would not pay taxes commensurate with the added expense.

Spreckel's Empire Ends

San Diego (U.P.).—The last of the fabulous John D. Spreckels' interest in San Diego holdings has been sold, ending an empire that began in 1887 and at one time was estimated at 25 million dollars. The last property was an 80-acre tract of unimproved land on Kearny Mesa.

Prince Georges Board Elects

Harry W. McNamee was reelected president of the Prince Georges County Board of Commissioners yesterday at a meeting in Upper Marlboro, Md.

McNamee, a retired merchant, became president of the board last October 19, following the death of Commissioner President William A. Carson. He lives at 8806 49th ave in Berwyn.

The commissioners also renamed Waldo Burnside as counsel to the board; Linden Briscoe, clerk; Miss Catherine Ridgely, secretary; Mrs. Clara Wilson, stenographer, and Mrs. Ellen Stamp, clerk.

A letter from the Prince Georges County Civic Federation asking a survey of the county government by University of Maryland experts was received by the commissioners. No action, however, was taken.

The commissioners directed Burnside to arrange a meeting with the county's legislative delegation for discussion of proposed legislation to be introduced in the January General Assembly.

Rezoning Bids Are Opposed In Bethesda

Forty Bethesda residents yesterday registered opposition to rezoning of a five-lot tract owned by Grady Motors, Inc., of Bethesda, for apartments.

At a hearing before the Montgomery City Council in the Bethesda County Building, the owners said plans for the land have not been completed, and opponents charged that under the requested land classification, a storage house could be erected as well as an apartment house.

The petition was one of seven considered at public hearings. All were taken under advisement.

In another zoning case, several persons who appeared in opposition to requested apartment zoning of a tract in Rock Creek Knoll, charged that the owners, James W. and Nancy S. Richards, had failed to display properly a required sign notifying adjoining home owners of the requested change.

Applications for commercial zoning to permit erection of shopping centers were submitted by Samuel E. Bogley, Bethesda real estate man, and Henry J. Connor, Inc., a Bethesda building firm. Both met opposition.

Bogley's petition was for land at the intersection of Greentree rd. and Old Georgetown rd. The Connor petition asked reclassification from Residential A to C of land on the west side of Old Georgetown rd. at Wyngate dr. Connor said the estimated cost of his shopping center is $250,000.

U. S. Tax Chief Is Subpenaed By Senate Textron Probers

Boston, Dec. 7 (AP).—The United States Commissioner of Internal Revenue has been subpenaed before a Senate subcommittee to answer what the committee says was his own charge that Royal Little, Textron president, sold stock under the market value to friends and associates.

Senator Charles W. Tobey, (R., N. H.), announced today that a United States marshal in Washington served subpenas on Commissioner George J. Schoeneman, and the Revenue Bureau's general counsel, Charles Oliphant, to appear Wednesday.

Tobey said Schoeneman failed to answer three requests to testify earlier before the committee, which now is in the fifth session of its inquiry into the multimillion dollar textile corporation.

The Senator said that 15 months ago Schoeneman wrote a letter to trustees of three charitable trusts connected with Textron, declaring that the trusts owed income taxes.

The Schoeneman letter, Tobey said, "also made five allegations, one that Little sold stock to friends and associates at less than the market value."

Committee counsel, Charles W. Tobey, jr., said the Federal tax code bars the revenue commissioner from "divulging information" concerning tax returns.

But he added that in his opinion the commissioner can testify on his letter.

"We want to ask the commissioner," the counsel said, "why they haven't followed up that letter?"

Newsmen asked the Senator what the committee would do if the commissioner did not appear.

Tobey smiled and said: "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

Earlier, Senator Tobey criticized Puerto Rico for what he called the "bait" of tax exemptions and low wages offered by the island government to American businessmen who establish plants there.

Tobey called that a "decided disadvantage" to firms operating in the United States.

But Puerto Rico received a spirited defense from a United States Department of Interior spokesman, Irwin W. Silverman. He said Puerto Rico does not pay tax revenues to the United States, and does offer such inducements as 12 tax free years to new American business.

But, Silverman contended, Puerto Rico set up that system so it would not have to "come, hat in hand, and ask Congress for relief."

Senator Tobey assailed the wage and hours law provision which permits the administrator to revise the United States minimum wage of 40 cents an hour down as low as 15 cents for some Puerto Rican industries.

Silverman agreed that 15 cents or 25 cents an hour is "a pitiful wage" but said Puerto Rico had to start its minima somewhere, and added his belief that the wage gap between the island and the United States "will close rapidly."

W. Va. Court to Review Contested Apple Law

Martinsburg, W. Va., Dec. 7.—The question of the constitutionality of the "West Virginia Apple Commission" law passed by the 1947 Legislature has been certified directly to the West Virginia Court of Appeals, and is expected to appear on the January docket, interested counsel and other persons here have been advised.

Validity of the law was challenged by a group of 28 growers from this big producing belt on the claim that the levy "subsidizes" States business and interferes with interstate commerce.

The law provides for imposition of a tax of a cent a bushel on commercially produced apples, the funds to be used for promoting the industry.

High Schools' Heavy Loss of Pupils Scored By Educator Before D. C. Teachers, Officials

A program to "strengthen the holding power of junior and senior high schools" was proposed last night by Dr. William G. Brink, professor of education at Northwestern University and a member of the staff surveying the District school system.

Speaking at a meeting of local public school teachers and officials at the Departmental Auditorium, Dr. Brink called for:

1. A curriculum designed to meet the needs of youth.
2. More challenging and realistic methods of instruction.
3. An emphasis on improving reading skills.
4. Attention to developing study habits that will enable a student to forward his own education outside of school.
5. Junior and senior high schools that serve the whole community rather than a limited number of students.

Pointing out that 553 out of every 1000 pupils leave school before graduating, Dr. Brink said the Nation can "ill afford" this "prodigious waste of human resources."

Looking into the reasons why students drop out, the educator said that many do not find in the public high schools "programs that are interesting, satisfying and challenging to them."

"Many feel and with ample justification," he said, "that the courses offered are highly abstract and have little practical value."

In citizenship training, he said, "we have at present probably the weakest link in a well-rounded system of youth education."

Required history and civics courses too frequently are "a mere exercise in memory, with relatively little stress on interpretation and revelancy to the contemporary scene."

He also found the average high school deficient in training youth in salable skills and in successful home living.

"Family maladjustments, the mounting divorce rates, and the disintegration of family life give evidence of the need for reorganization and extensions in present high school curricula," he said.

School Excuse Policy Fixed

Fairfax County School Board yesterday set up a uniform policy for excusing first and second-grade students from school an hour early.

The board agreed to adhere to the present practice of releasing students at 2 p. m. instead of 3 p. m., if parents request it and the child lives within walking distance of the school; if parents furnish transportation, or if transportation can be furnished conveniently by the county.

School buses in the future, the board decided, will carry children home at 2 p. m. only if the bus is not required to make another run at 3 p. m.

In other actions yesterday, the school board:

1. Formally approved a campaign this week in the schools for small donations from students to buy Woodlawn, the home of Nellie Custis, George Washington's adopted daughter, for a public shrine.

2. Assured a delegation fro Groveton it will follow through on its request to the Civil Aeronautics Administration that Beacon Field Airport, adjacent to Groveton School, be moved.

Parents Fight '2-Shift' School

Teen-age delinquency and other evils would result from double shifts in Prince Georges County high schools, a delegation of Greenbelt High School patrons told County School Superintendent G. Gardner Shugart yesterday.

The group, headed by Albert J. Schaffer, president of the Greenbelt High School Parent-Teacher Association, included residents of Beltsville and Berwyn who send their children to the Greenbelt school.

Shugart admitted double shifts would be bad for school children, their parents and teachers but said they must be adopted if the present shortage of classrooms is not relieved before the next school year.

Greenbelt expects about 350 additional students next fall, bringing the school's enrollment to nearly 1000. The present school building was designed for 500 pupils.

The parent delegation asked that two quonset huts be provided to care for the additional classes and that the school patrons be kept informed of developments.

Shugart said the proposed new senior high school on Colesville rd., near Hyattsville, will provide relief for Greenbelt if it is built. The building is on the county school board's emergency list, he said.

The parent delegation also visited Prince Georges County Commissioners to offer the same plea.

Pumpkin Mystery

It seems pretty clear from the hearings yesterday that the House Un-American Activities Committee has got hold of something real this time—some genuine documentary evidence. This kind of material has been so scarce in the committee's past investigations that its members do not seem to know quite what to do with it. At any rate, they, and their chief of staff, have been behaving peculiarly. The moral justification for Mr. Nixon's disclosure of selected parts of Mr. Chambers' deposition made in a pretrial hearing on the Hiss libel suit is especially puzzling. But it is not the only enigma in this affair—which Mr. Mundt has prejudged by calling it the "Hiss-Chambers espionage case."

One of the first questions facing the committee, once it gained possession of the libel-suit documents and the pumpkin-shell microfilms, was whether their content could be publicly revealed without security risk. In seeking a preliminary answer to this question, Mr. Stripling went first, on Sunday evening, to visit Mr. Sumner Welles. Mr. Welles was also the committee's first outside witness on the matter in yesterday's open hearing. He was, to be sure, Undersecretary of State when the documents were pilfered some 10 years ago. But that does not, it seems to us, make him a qualified witness as to whether they are still confidential. It seems obvious that only the current officers of the State Department could answer those questions. Why didn't the committee initially call upon Mr. Peurifoy, who testified as a fairly qualified witness about the possible breaking of American codes.

As a matter of fact, the State Department itself might have shown more alacrity in finding out about the material taken from its files. From Friday morning, when existence of the microfilms and their nature was revealed in the press, until about Monday noon the department seems to have done nothing. Then, apparently despairing of an invitation from the committee, two departmental security officers visited the Hill to take a look at the documents. Knowing the committee's penchant for publicity, the State Department should have been immediately concerned to prevent any damage that might have been done by public exposure of the material. The delay seems to us as peculiar as the tactics of the Committee on Un-American Activities itself.

Basing Point

After challenging statements made in our editorial columns of November 23 concerning the nature of facts, Mr. Stephens Rippey asks whether the writer of the November 22 basing point editorial "would accept as a fact the fact . . . that the Federal Trade Commission has made public a formal statement of policy on Geographical Pricing Systems which doesn't at all say what Mr. Capehart and The Post's editorial writer say is FTC's position."

To the direct query our answer is, of course, "yes." But we take exception to Mr. Rippey's implication that the editorial stated—and wrongly stated—the position taken by the FTC on controversial issues of pricing policy. The editorial simply said that the "position taken by the FTC in its fight against delivered price systems gives weight to the charge that the commission regards any pricing system except that based on uniform f. o. b. mill net prices as discriminatory, hence illegal." That conclusion was based on evidence presented to the Capehart Committee from a wide variety of sources and it reflects the considered opinions of a great many witnesses appearing before the Capehart Committee to plead for legislative action to eliminate the confusion raised by the basing point cases.

Moreover, the FTC statement of policy to which our correspondent refers does not allay the fears of businessmen that pricing policies involving freight absorption will render them liable to prosecution. Incidentally, Commissioner Mason of the FTC, who did not participate in the majority statement of policy, has fanned those fears by declaring that in his opinion "anyone who uses freight absorption, zone prices or an individual universal delivered price system, operates under the shadow of illegality and certainly is taking a calculated risk." The harassed businessman will extract cold comfort from the FTC's assurance that under the Federal Trade Commission Act "where there is neither conscious parallel action which eliminates price competition nor monopolistic position maintained through unfair methods, a single enterprise is free to adopt any geographic pricing practice." For elsewhere in the policy declaration the commission says that it "now holds the view that sustained observance of single or multiple basing point systems which are complex and rigid is in itself substantial even though not necessarily conclusive evidence of collusion" (italics ours). In the light of this pronouncement, safety seems to lie in avoidance of any system that might give rise to mere suspicion of collusive, hence illegal, pricing practices.

The legal problems raised by recent basing point cases cannot be satisfactorily solved by sweeping indiscriminate legalization of basing point pricing or other pricing systems that lend themselves to collusive price-fixing. For that would open the door to abuses and would be just as much against the public interest as would the sweeping away of all such systems regardless of their merits or the effect on the economy of the country. Now that the Capehart Committee and the FTC have announced their intention to work together for a solution of the basing point problems that confront industry they may be able to formulate a program that will help to clear up existing legal obscurities and provide more definite rules for the guidance of businessmen.

Judicial Juggling

Interest in the Supreme Court's extension of the Fair Labor Standards Act to the United States' leased military base on Bermuda extends far beyond the recovery of extra pay for overtime work. The effect of the majority opinion is to bring this leased base into the category of "possessions of the United States." To be sure, the court disavows the idea that the military bases which President Roosevelt obtained from Great Britain in exchange for 50 over-age destroyers are American territory "in a political sense." The fact remains that it extends to the bases a law which Congress said should apply only in the United States, its territories and possessions.

The Fair Labor Standards Act was passed in 1938. The Bermuda base was leased to the United States for 99 years in 1940. Congress could not possibly have contemplated extension of the act to a base that was yet to be leased as the result of a war that had not yet begun. But Justice Reed and four of his brethren jump this chasm of time by saying that "our duty as a court is to construe the word 'possession' as our judgment instructs us the lawmakers, within constitutional limits, would have done had they acted at the time of the legislation with the present situation in mind." This comes very close to saying that it is the function of the Supreme Court to read the mind of Congress and amend the law accordingly.

Some other statutes have been specifically amended by Congress so as to make them applicable to the leased military bases. This alone is a strong indication that Congress did not wish to have all laws enacted for our "possessions" extended to the leased bases by judicial mutilation of that word's plain meaning. Moreover, the Wage-Hour Administrator had ruled that the bases were not covered by the act. The State Department protested that the lower court's ruling, which the Supreme Court has now affirmed, "would not . . be calculated to improve our relations" with Great Britain. The Department of Justice also protested against the view the court has taken. "Among responsible agencies of the United States," said the dissent of Justice Jackson, supported by Chief Justice Vinson and Justices Frankfurter and Burton, "this court alone insists that the Bermuda bases are possessions."

Congress could at any time require Government contractors operating at these bases to adhere to any wage policy that it might deem desirable. In presuming to speak for Congress before Congress itself has acted, the court has laid itself open to criticism on the old score of legislating from the bench. By regarding a leased base as a "possession" in defiance of the State Department which negotiated the lease, it has also needlessly embarrassed our international relations and given a handle to the propagandists who are accusing the United States of imperialism. Negotiations for other bases needed for our security are likely to be seriously handicapped. We suspect that Vermilya-Brown vs. Connell will rank high among the most unfortunate Supreme Court opinions of recent years.

Stalemate In Greece

President Truman's quarterly report on the results of aid to Greece is hardly of a sort to bring wild rejoicing. Despite the advice of an American military mission and the expenditure of 170 million dollars in arms and supplies, the Greek army campaign against the Communist guerillas has reached "a military stalemate." An estimated 22,000 guerillas are still trying to "spread ruin and demoralization"; when the program started 18 months ago the number of guerillas was figured at 15,000. The President ascribes the reverses to the fact that "the bulk of the guerilla forces which had been defeated in the Grammos Mountains operations escaped into Albania" and to "the failure of the Greek army to make a determined effort to liquidate" the guerillas when they returned and rallied.

This contrasts with the somewhat rosy picture painted in the previous report—a report distorted by the delay in making it public. Nor is there anything in events since September 30—the end of the period covered by the current report—to indicate improvement. The degenerate state of Greek politics coinciding with the illness of the superannuated Premier Sophoulis merely accentuates the great dearth of new leadership.

But the effects of the aid program cannot be judged solely by the performance of the Greek army. American support of Greece has done two things: It has stopped the Russian drive to the Mediterranean, for which the Communist uprising was the advance legion; and it has encouraged defections among Moscow's satellites, as evidenced by Tito's split with the Cominform. Tito reportedly rebelled at the direct invasion of Greece that was being urged upon him. Moreover, our aid helped point up the issue before the United Nations, which roundly condemned Yugoslavia, Bulgaria and Albania for incitement of the guerillas. Thus on purely strategic grounds the aid program has justified itself.

Whether it has helped Greece internally is something else. It is easy to be too harsh on the Greeks for failure to put their house in order. What is often forgotten is that Greece has gone through five separate invasions in the last decade. Many able leaders have been killed. Beyond this, the blood-for-blood urge is strong, and politics have taken an internecine turn. Lack of leadership in turn contributes to lack of inspiration. But somehow we have failed to rekindle the inspiration of a great cause. It is obvious that the Greeks are not moved by the same spirit they showed in repelling the Italian invaders eight years ago. Instead, there is a disturbing tendency to look upon American aid as a sort of bribery for fighting someone else's war.

The President recommends continued aid, plus additional training and development of leadership in all echelons, as the price of preventing Communist domination of Greece. Unquestionably this is necessary. But the stagnation in Greece does raise a real question as to whether American military aid in such situations can ever be fully effective without outright intervention and command, i. e., total control. This question ought to be pondered thoroughly as our policy-makers debate whether to plunge into the morass in China.

Suspended Session

In the absence of a transatlantic stethoscope, Mr. Dulles' medical testimony cannot be challenged. He pleaded for a quick adjournment of the Paris Assembly session lest the delegates suffer physical and mental breakdowns. That the current meeting must have been a severe strain on the strength of those present is easily understandable. They have worked very hard and accomplished very little except to fill the record with words. The debate on adjournment is a case in point. It lasted the entire day Monday as delegate after delegate lamented the endless talk-talk of the past 2½ months.

Whether on the grounds advanced by Mr. Dulles or on other considerations—which seems more likely to us—the Assembly decided to quit this Saturday night and reconvene next April 1. A principal motivation seems to have been a desire to get the debaters out of the rostrum and home by Christmas. It is ironical that the birthday of the Prince of Peace should have the effect of interrupting the U. N.'s peace-sustaining labors, however slight they have been.

Actually, a number of deeper motives were also in operation. These included a desire on the part of some delegations to postpone consideration of certain problems, like the Italian colonies and Palestine, in the hope that time would bring an easier or more agreeable solution. And the Soviet group would have preferred to put all remaining issues over until next fall, or even drop them.

This position is at once the explanation of the present session's difficulties and the tip-off on what will probably happen next spring in Flushing. Of all the talkers, the Russians and their little helpers easily take first place. They came to Paris prepared to argue as long as possible on every issue and then repeat their arguments all over again. It is a tactic of delay aimed at keeping international difficulties at the boiling point.

Has the Paris session been a failure, then? And is the prospective continuation of it at New York likewise doomed to fail? We think the answer is no in both cases. The Assembly's function in the U. N. is to be a forum of debate where all problems of international relations can be thoroughly talked out. If the Russians and their satellites have taken full advantage of this purpose to delay decisions rather than to expedite them, that shows the Assembly has been at least as much of a success as a failure.

Farm Wives

Rural women will no doubt rejoice in the recent advice given farmers by the National Planning Association to spend their profits on better home equipment, clothing, education and medical care. Nothing is said about building bigger barns and silos, on which a farmer's money used to be spent while his wife continued to carry water from the well and to wait for that extra bedroom. However, in recent years a revolution has been under way in farm home life, and there are now more pressure cookers and pianos in rural than in city homes. City visitors in rural regions are often surprised by the gleaming white enamel efficiency of farm kitchens—even though the parlors may still have their hair wreaths and antimacassars.

Farm wives are reported in a fever of home improvement. Much of farm spending in 1947 was for new kitchens and bathrooms, home freezers, refrigerators, washing machines, and other labor-saving equipment. The demand for electricity also is rising among farm women in the more remote regions, as President Truman may have sensed in his campaigning. Farm wives also are more clothes-minded, and saw to it that their families spent relatively more on clothes last year than did average citizens. Nevertheless the majority of rural dwellers still lack the conveniences of most city families—only 28 per cent of farm homes, for instance, have running water. No doubt many farm women will continue to press upon their husbands the argument that it is better business at this time to buy things for the house than to take over—at inflated values—the acreage of the "next 40."

"What Is News?"

The Washington Post is to be congratulated or pitied, I'm not sure which, for stripping itself naked in the November 23 editorial, "What Is News," and allowing us all to see the philosophy under which it operates.

"There is no objective standard for determining what is news any more than there is such a thing as objective truth," says The Post. "Facts appear to be facts only because a majority of the people accepts them as such."

So, there is no such thing as objective truth and facts are to be determined by majority acceptance! God help us! We will have Federal facts, State facts, county facts, city facts and a host of others arrived at by majority vote, or perhaps by acclamation. Anyhow, it would be great fun.

As an aside, I'm wondering whether the pundit who did the November 22 basing point editorial would accept as a fact the fact (or is it?) that the Federal Trade Commission has made public a formal statement of policy on "Geographical Pricing Systems" which doesn't at all say what Mr. Capehart and The Post's editorial writer say is FTC's position. Or does The Post just make up its own facts as it goes along?

STEPHENS RIPPEY,
Washington.

Religion In The Schools

Replying in the December 4 Washington Post to my letter of December 1 concerning the ideas of Horace Mann on religious instruction in public schools, C. S. Longacre confuses two very different things—the teaching of a particular creed and the teaching of general religious principles. The public school system sponsored by Horace Mann opposed the former (which he called sectarianism) but upheld the latter.

Dr. E. I. F. Williams, in his excellent work "Horace Mann, Educational Statesman," brings out this point very clearly: "Though Mann opposed introducing sectarianism into the schools, he had always strongly supported instruction in morals and religion. Had his wishes been followed, it is likely that the present-day schools would be religious rather than secular, but on the other hand, religious rather than sectarian" . . . "It has been charged that he was an opponent of religious teaching in the common school. Nothing could be farther from the truth."

Yet, ignoring this distinction, Mr. Longacre tries to prove his thesis—that "when the public school system was adopted under the sponsorship of Horace Mann and his associates, a definite understanding prevailed under the general tax plan that no citizen should be taxed to support the teaching of religion"—by quoting a law which says not a single word against the teaching of religion in the public schools, but merely prescribes: "No sectarian tenet, creed or church doctrine shall be taught in the public schools."

Equal Schools

The recent Strayer survey of the Washington public school system convincingly proves that equal educational facilities within a segregated school system are utterly impossible. This impression is reinforced when it is recalled that the Federation of Citizens Associations, about two years ago, after a brief survey, declared the colored schools "substantially equal" to those of the white schools.

The Strayer committee disposes of another perplexing educational problem, the Cardozo High School. It simply eliminates such a school! Thus, while white students attend one of the finest schools in the country for business courses, Roosevelt High School, Negro students will be forced to attend two high schools, both of which are only in the planning stage. The fact that one of these new schools is to be technical in nature is of no importance where colored students are concerned.

The Central-Northwest Citizens Association wishes to protest violently against any effort to eliminate a new Cardozo High School and will fight continually for the utter destruction of segregation in the city's school system, a system which the Federation of Citizens Associations so fondly champions as being "substantially equal" for all children.

EMERSON A. WILLIAMS, M.D.,
Chairman, Education Committee,
Central-Northwest Citizens
Association, Washington.

Costa Rican President

On reading your very interesting United Press dispatch from San Jose in which President Figueres of Costa Rica explains the reasons for disbanding the army of Costa Rica, I note that it is stated that the present Junta de Gobierno will turn over the government to President-elect Otilio Ulate on May 8, 1952. The exact date for the mentioned change in our government is May 8, 1950.

MARIO A. ESQUIVEL,

Partition Of China

It is quite possible that peace in China could be arranged on the basis of a dividing of China into two separate countries, a Red China in the north (Manchuria), with the remainder of China under a separate government.

This would, of course, not be an ideal solution but it may have some substantial merit nevertheless. Some alternatives may be less desirable, such as an extension of red control over the remainder. READER.

"Secularism"

I resent the letter with my signature attached, published in the December 3 Washington Post. Had you printed it as it was written, it would have conveyed a different meaning.

I mentioned nothing about "sorrow or bitterness" on my part but I did say that the editorial of November 28 "Secularism" voiced a "narrow and bitter" opinion on the part of the editorial writer.

Please, in fairness, print letters of protest as they are written and not as you interpret them. MRS. H. McGUIRL.

Editor's Note: The Washington Post never intentionally distorts or alters the sense of letters to the editor, though frequently we have to condense them. The error in this case, which we regret, was occasioned by the fact that Mrs. McGuirl's letter was written in longhand and we mistook several words. Readers will help us to avoid future mistakes by typing their letters (double-spaced) wherever possible or by insuring that their penmanship is legible.

Hospitality To Foreigners

Those of us who are actively interested in the foreign students who are at present in this city were very much impressed by Malvina Lindsay's comments in her column December 4. It is very true that American families have a great opportunity to show hospitality (and thereby to increase international friendship) to the many foreign students who are studying in this country.

Through the international clubs at the different universities, or through International Student House, American families can find opportunities of meeting students from other lands, and also foreign friends who are working either in the international agencies or in embassies. We are associated with the International Student House, which is one of the projects of the American Friends' Service Committee, and is a center where we try to put into practice the Quaker interest in international friendship and understanding.

However, there is another side of the picture, at least here in Washington, which is not so encouraging. Two incidents of recent months will illustrate.

Early in the summer of this year a large group of members of International Student House, including men and women from many different countries, together with American citizens, had an outing together. They arrived back at the house at 10 p. m. one Sunday evening. A young man from British West Africa escorted one of our Canadian women members to a bus stop. He saw her on to the bus and returned to the house. He was followed by a traffic policeman who accosted him and wanted to know who the white woman was he had been with. The student was treated somewhat roughly, and eventually arrested for "disorderly behavior." Representations were made to the corporation council, and the case was withdrawn. The student complained about the action of the officer and the matter was taken up at the police trial board. They decided that the officer had not been guilty of any conduct deserving censure.

Six members of the International Student House were recently walking to the house, at the corner of New Hampshire ave. and R st. when they were attacked by two men, who apparently resented the fact that one of the group was an African. The American man was struck severely, and the others, including the women were treated roughly. The police were called but did not regard it necessary to make any arrest. The officer in charge did not even report the incident to his precinct.

We should think that most readers of your paper will realize the very bad impression that this type of incident makes on those people from other countries who come to the United States. It takes a great deal of true American hospitality to counterbalance the damage done. How can assurance be given to our foreign students and visitors that they can be free to choose their own friends and to appear in public with them on the streets of the Nation's Capital?

Human Rights Awakening

By Malvina Lindsay

Docile Mankind

WHETHER ALL this concern with human rights by the General Assembly of the United Nations will amount to anything more than talk is a question widely asked. For enforcing the noble declarations adopted is a problem for the U. N. equal to that of the mice in belling the cat.

Nationalism being what it is today, there seems little chance of there being set up any world tribunal to which the little fellow who feels his rights abused can appeal over the head of his government. Australia suggested such a court, but it was considered "unrealistic." The United States and China have proposed an international committee to hear complaints presented by nations on behalf of individuals. But generally the enforcement of the human rights finally agreed upon will be up to the nations themselves.

However the talk that has gone on in Paris has not been lost even if nothing concrete comes of it now. Reports of it have spread and will continue to spread to all parts of the earth. It has made people everywhere think and talk about their rights. It could set into motion on a world scale the electric feeling about human rights that swept through the early colonists in this country, which today constantly creeps out in conversation, and which lies behind the sturdy American resistance to being pushed around.

WHAT IS more, the Declaration of Human Rights, to be followed by a legally binding covenant, will put all U.N. members on the spot whether or not they vote for or sign these documents. Indeed, the Paris argument has already put them there. The debates between Alexei P. Pavlov, Soviet member, and Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt and other Western delegates have publicized national viewpoints on human freedom—also dragged some national skeletons out of closets.

For example, in discussion of the universal right to rest, leisure, reasonably limited working hours, and paid holidays, Mr. Pavlov charged the British with overworking children, prisoners and young girls in Bombay. Mrs. Freda Corbert of the United Kingdom replied that Indian workers were not under British government control and asked the Soviet delegate whether workers in forced labor camps in the U.S.S.R. had limited working hours.

Women throughout the world will get some new ideas of freedom from the declaration. Those who live in countries where parents plan the marriages and where child marriage is still practiced will eventually learn of Article 14, which says: "Men and women of full age have the right to marry and found a family," and "Marriage shall be entered into only with the full consent of both intended spouses." Also of wide effect in family life is the provision: "Men and women shall have equal rights both during marriage and at its dissolution."

Women everywhere also will profit from the declaration that they have the right to own property, that mother and child have the right to special care and assistance, and that everyone has the right to education and the right to change one's nationality.

HOWEVER in all this concern over human rights—which has been one of the main issues of the current session of the General Assembly—there lurks one danger. To this Charles Malik, Minister of Lebanon in the United States and rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights, has called attention. It is man's almost pathetic dependence on his state or the United Nations to grant him rights which he should feel were fundamental within himself.

The real crisis in human rights, Mr. Malik recently wrote in the United Nations Bulletin, is that "people today do not believe they have natural, inherent, inalienable rights." Rather, says Mr. Malik, "the merest suggestion that there is nature, reality, truth, peace and rest, an unchanging order of things, which it is our supreme destiny to know and conform to, is anathema to modern man . . . Destitute and desolate he goes about begging for his rights at the feet of the world, and when the commission (of the U. N.) votes an article by 10 to 8, he rejoices that there, there he is granted a right!"

Bernard Baruch voiced a similar thought when he recently said: "Perhaps the No. 1 job of conservation immediately ahead is to restore and conserve man's faith in his ability to govern himself."

Inside Stories

The shrill little monsoon over how many times a day Madame Chiang Kai-shek saw fit to change her sheets the last time she was in Washington is trivial. What does seem regrettable, even in an age not remarkable for good manners, is that when a guest stays with the President of the United States, one of the White House staff sees no impropriety in writing a book about what goes on in the guest's bedroom. Hardly American hospitality at its finest. The tendency for hangers-on and flunkeys to write books of so-called reminiscence, whether the authors be housekeepers or the women chauffeurs of generals, is deplorable.

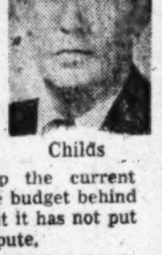
Washington Calling

By Marquis Childs

Division In The Pentagon

THE HARSH facts are catching up with the convenient myth that the armed services have been unified. Propaganda cannot cover up the truth, which is that rivalry between the services is almost more acute than it was before passage of the National Military Establishment Act.



Childs

The official damper put on by the White House may keep the current squabble over the budget behind closed doors. But it has not put an end to the dispute.

The civilian and military heads of the three services continued to press their separate claims. Within the Bureau of the Budget, which must send final figures to Congress, they are complaining that no one in the Pentagon Building seems to be even close to resolving the quarrel. The only answer is to hint that the total must go above the 15-billion-dollar ceiling, so that each service will get everything it asks for.

All this is pointed up by the report of the Committee on the National Security Organization of the Hoover Commission to Reorganize the Government. Chairman of that committee is Ferdinand Eberstadt, who was frequently mentioned as Secretary of National Defense in the event Governor Dewey had been elected President.

EBERSTADT and the majority of the committee recognize an "improvement" under the unification bill, but they also recognize the serious obstacles in the way of any real unification with the present top-heavy setup. Army, Navy and Air each has a separate Secretary, an Undersecretary and two Assistant Secretaries, while the Secretary of National Defense supposedly top dog, has no assistants and no adequate staff.

The Eberstadt committee also recognizes the weakness in the Joint Chiefs of Staff, where each service chief has the veto power and there is no over-all military chief. Timidly and tentatively, Eberstadt and the committee propose that the Secretary of Defense be given a principal military assistant and that a top military man also be named to represent the Secretary on the Joint Chiefs of Staff. As representative of the Secretary, he would act as umpire in referring disputes to his boss, but he would not have power to end those disputes.

Two dissenters on the Eberstadt Committee are much more forthright and courageous, and it happens that the two dissenters know far more about the military establishment through direct experience than any other committee member. One is John J. McCloy, who served as Assistant Secretary of War to Henry L. Stimson throughout World War II.

McCloy proposes a Chief of Staff for the Joint Chiefs who would have final authority to resolve major service differences. He points out that the same arguments now being used against such a No. 1 chief were used when the Army was reorganized and three separate chiefs of Infantry, Artillery and Cavalry were merged into one.

AT THE same time, McCloy scoffs at the "man on horseback" argument, which is often raised to question the extraordinary power of such an individual. As he points out, most men on horseback in recent times have been civilians and more often than not military men have tended to be a restraining force.

But the really vigorous dissenter is Robert P. Patterson, who was Undersecretary to Stimson and Secretary of War prior to unification. Bluntly, Patterson says that the present setup may have created more divisiveness than unity. It has certainly not brought about the economies that are possible, he adds.

With the forthrightness that characterized his wartime service, Patterson recommends that the top-heavy system of three separate Secretaries, Undersecretaries and Assistants be abolished. In its place he would have merely the Secretary of Defense, who would have two Undersecretaries and one or more assistants. The latter would not be special pleaders for Army, Navy and Air Force.

Patterson is favored by some influential groups as successor to Secretary of Defense James Forrestal if and when the latter resigns. In his zeal to prosecute the war with every possible ounce of energy that could be spared from the civilian economy, Patterson often offended those who were plugging business and pleasure as usual.

It is hard to see how the present setup can continue. A recent magazine article by Forrestal suggesting that all—or nearly all—was sweetness and light had caused wry laughter in the Pentagon. The bickering and divisiveness would seem to invite another Pearl Harbor. Congress returns in less than a month with signs that an accounting will be demanded.

3 Satellite States Closing Year of Recovery

converted it into an assembly plant first for Stukas, later for V2's, and left it a waste of ruins. The Poles took over the wreck with raw peasant labor and are now turning out 10,000 box-cars a year.

Hungary's recovery stands well below Poland's but substantially above that of Czechoslovakia. The Hungarians have made the quickest strides in repairing war damages, rebuilding bridges, patching communications. This year a good harvest has flushed Budapest with food again and the Sunday strollers are as well dressed as those in Paris. Hungary is a poor land, barren of great natural resources except bauxite; the Germans developed the bauxite enormously for aluminum production during the war and output is now high above prewar levels. Steel, textiles, precision goods, locomotives, are all at or above prewar levels. Russian reparations drain Hungarian resources and industrial effort heavily, but the nation is pushing slowly back.

In the pattern of eastern recovery, Czechoslovakia is a poor third. Two things have hurt her. The first was drought in 1947, and the second politics in 1948.

The 1947 drought's hungry aftereffects have been too deep for this year's normal harvest to cure. Food is scarcer than anywhere in central Europe and international relief agencies say that serious malnutrition exists in some parts of the land. Czechoslovakia's extensive industry lives by working up foreign raw materials with native skill; and the huge drain on foreign exchange to buy the food has forced her to export to the utmost to cover food needs, leaving only a tantalizing amount of consumer goods to cover home needs.

Politics have swung Czechoslovakia out of her traditional trade orbit. Ninety per cent of her foreign trade (by which one third of the nation lived) depended on importing western raw materials and selling the west the resulting manufactures. Czechoslovakia was one country the Marshall Plan, with its huge raw material credits, might easily have made a showpiece of recovery. By spurning it, Czechoslovakia ripped herself away from credits for cotton, coal, fats, metals and food and therefore has to impose on her people the toughest system of postwar rationing in continental Europe.

'Exit Germany, Enter Russia' Is Theme of Trade

Following hard on the heels of industrial recovery is the beginning of a new eastern trade pattern. Each country is still struggling too hard with home planning. Nevertheless, in the past six months a whole series of bilateral pacts have begun to shape the trade of eastern Europe.

Writer Has Just Finished Tour of Satellite States

Theodore H. White is a veteran foreign correspondent, editor of "The Stilwell Papers" and coauthor of "Thunder Out of China." He has just completed a tour of Poland, Hungary and Cechoslovakia.

In broadest outline, the new trade has one underlying theme: exit Germany, enter Russia.

Prewar Germany stood like a giant whose shadow fell across the economic and industrial life of every country to its east. Poland and Hungary were at once its pantries and granaries, giving it food on the one hand and being its customers for heavy industrial products and capital equipment on the other. Nazi political penetration followed the well-marked channels of commercial domination.

Poland, Hungary and Czechoslovakia are now planning Germany out of their future. In her stead, Russia enters as the main partner, but on a different basis as a supplier of foods and/or raw materials, as a customer for manufactured goods and industrial equipment.

Czechoslovakia has the biggest problem of adjustment. The old dependence on Western nations for her sales of textiles, glassware, gloves, beads, gadgets or for purchase of cotton, food, metal or fats is to be ended by the new five-year plan. It will stress the development of heavy industry to fill Germany's old markets in such countries as Romania, Poland and Hungary. Czechoslovakia's new trade treaty with Russia makes her Russia's biggest foreign supplier and customer. She sends Russia by this treaty finished manufactures and imports, mainly foods and raw materials. The Czechs plan to switch their agriculture from wheat (they can buy Russian wheat for 30 per cent less than the cost of production at home) and concentrate on raising meat, fruits and vegetables for domestic tables.

The Hungarians, in the new trade pattern, kiss off the international wheat trade, they hope, forever. Hungarian wheat formerly competed on world markets only because it was produced with the most exploited and poverty-stricken peasant labor. Russia and America can produce and sell wheat much cheaper. Hungary plans only for self-sufficiency in bread grains, but hopes to become an exporter of fruits, conserves and table delicacies. Industrially, she plans to move in on Germany's old field of light precision manufacture. At present Russia is the main raw material supplier of Hungary, shipping coal, cotton, steel and wood, receiving in return river boats, textiles, locomotives.

Hope to Become Free Of Capitalist Fluctuations

Poland again is the standout in the new eastern trade pattern; she has gone farthest in adjusting her plans to those of her neighbors. Wherever Polish consumption or resources cannot guarantee efficient line production, the Poles plan to rely on whatever neighbor has full-scale production going or planned. Since Hungary has bauxite and aluminum plants, Poland plans to let Hungary carry the burden of aluminum for both, paying off in Polish coal. From Czechoslovakia's five-year plan she expects to get investment goods, vehicles and shoes, paying in food and coal. Polish-Czech cooperation is well advanced—they have a joint plan for an Oder - Danube canal that will set eastern trade flowing from the Baltic to the Black Sea by barge; they plan joint electric-generating facilities at border points.

Eastern Europe still recognizes the urgent need of western materials, though in the future this need will drop heavily. Cotton, wool, fats, nonferrous metals, coffee, tea, cocoa, rubber, must come from the Western world, as must certain types of capital goods which only America produces. Therefore each individual plan leaves a margin for trade with the Atlantic states: Poland hopes that its blue chips of coal, meat and paper will cover essential western imports; Hungary hopes that its fruit orchards and truck gardens will win wider acceptance for their produce in the west; Czechoslovakia will continue to produce glassware, textiles and shoes to trade for essential Western commodies. But, basically, all of them are orienting their future to face east, planning themselves out of dependence on the fluctuations of capitalist economy. Tight American licensing control on exports and the absence of Western credits is speeding this tendency abnormally.

A Czechoslovak trade expert put his preference for dealing with Russia this way: "When you make a trade treaty with a Western country, you have the right only to sell a certain amount of goods if you can find a customer in that country and if he can pay for it. When you make a treaty with Russia, the goods are sold for the next five years, the price fixed, the market certain. This is the difference between hunting for our meat in the forest or buying it in the butcher shop at a fixed price. The Western countries like to hunt, but we want to buy at the butcher shop."

A curious footnote is the eastern insistence on using the Yankee dollar as a yardstick of value. However much they loathe capitalist economics, the Communists have as yet been unable to create a measuring stick which covers the exchange of labor and goods between countries. They write their trade treaties not in proletarian rubles, forints, crowns or zlotys, but in United States dollars.

Matter Of Fact

By Joseph And Stewart Alsop

The New Face

ALTHOUGH the direction of American policy remains in doubt, it is now clear at any rate what individuals are going to make American policy. Most of the faces are entirely familiar.

The highly suspect campaign against Defense Secretary James V. Forrestal, Secretary of State George C. Marshall and Undersecretary Robert Lovett has failed utterly. Forrestal will remain in office as long as he is willing to serve. So will Lovett, at least as long as Marshall's health permits him to continue. And when Marshall goes, he will probably be replaced by W. Averell Harriman, whose wide and intensive experience insures that we shall not again have to lose an ally in order to educate a Secretary of State. The new face among foreign and defense policy-makers is, in truth, that of Harry S. Truman himself.

For Truman now clearly intends to play a decisive role in the making of policy. Therefore it is worth examining the way in which Truman gets the advice and information on which any President must base his decisions.

One automatic channel of information to the President is the daily top secret intelligence digest, about two pages in length, which the President receives from the Central Intelligence Agency, and which he reads religiously. More important, however, are the daily briefings which the President receives at 9:30 every morning from the secretary of the National Security Council. This key job is held by Sidney Souers, an able, little-known Missouri businessman, who enjoys the complete confidence of the President and the chief policy-makers.

SOUERS brings the President up to date on the progress toward a decision which the National Security Council is making on those issues with which the council is "seized." Most of the preliminary spadework, on which Souers keeps the President informed, is done by George Kennan, chief State Department planner, and Gen. Lauris Norstad, Gen. Albert Wedemeyer and Admiral Arthur Struble, Defense Department planners. Policy papers are always initiated by the State Department, according to a ruling approved by the President and designed to prevent undue military influence.

The National Security Council meets twice a month to consider these policy papers. Under ordinary circumstances, the President does not attend the meetings but studies the council's decisions at his leisure, after a thorough background briefing by Souers. About one time in five, however, an immediate decision on a crucial issue is required. Then the President takes the chair and the final decision is made on the spot.

The President can, of course, approve, amend or reverse any council decision on his own authority. Until recently, he almost always accepted every Security Council decision without change. Yet it is significant that within recent weeks he amended one Security Council decision concerning the Berlin airlift and reversed another crucial council decision to withdraw the Navy from the Communist-threatened Chinese port of Tsingtao. Truman ordered the Tsingtao garrison reinforced.

THE PRESIDENT does not, of course, make decisions entirely on the basis of Security Council papers. On specific issues, he confers regularly with Marshall, Lovett, Forrestal and other policy-makers. He will often discuss a Security Council decision with the White House entourage, and such men as ECA's Paul Hoffman and Roger Lapham have recently influenced him, especially on China policy.

Finally, there is the inevitable influence of the advice he receives on domestic and political matters. The business-as-usual policy embodied in the 15-billion-dollar defense ceiling, for example, was primarily the brainchild of Treasury Secretary John Snyder.

Even so, the National Security Council is increasingly the recognized channel through which decisions on high policy must pass. Until very recently, Palestine was the only area in which Truman had opposed a Security Council position. Toward the end of the recent campaign, certain of Truman's political advisers were urging him to extend de jure recognition to Israel. Truman referred the matter to the Security Council.

It transpired that delicate negotiations were under way to reach an agreement for British recognition of Israel in return for American recognition of Trans-Jordan. These negotiations would have been upset by unilateral American action. And in this case the President accepted Security Council advice and dropped the plan for pre-election de jure recognition of Israel.

In short, the Tsingtao decision and other incidents indicate that the President is now determined to exercise his right to shape high policy. But in the Security Council there is an automatic mechanism for making available to the President competent advice and reliable information on any issue. As the Israel episode suggests, Truman is making full use of this mechanism. This should serve to reduce the danger of those snap judgments on crucial issues to which the President, a courageous but impulsive man, has in the past been prone.

Talmadge Will See Lynch-Case Widow

Atlanta, Dec. 7 (U.P.).—Gov. Herman Talmadge said today he will see Amy Mallard, widow of a Negro allegedly slain by a band of white men, if she visits his office Wednesday.

Howell

Mrs. Mallard's attorney, Aaron Kravitch, said in Savannah that the schoolteacher would "tell the Governor what happened" on the night of November 20 when Robert Mallard was killed.

She has already sworn out a murder warrant against William L. (Spud) Howell, 24, a tall, thin white man, saying she recognized him when the Mallard automobile was ambushed.

Two other white men, Roderick Clifton and James W. Spivey, are also held in the Toombs County Jail at Lyons, Ga., in connection with the case. No charges have been made against them.

Mrs. Mallard is due to testify Friday before a special session of the grand jury. If it returns indictments, trial is expected next week.

4 Atlantans Angry With KKK, Police

Atlanta, Dec. 7 (AP).—Four citizens made it so plain today that they were angry with the Ku Klux Klan and the Fulton County police that the Atlanta Journal felt obliged to issue words of caution.

The citizens, including the Rev. J. K. Brown, Methodist minister, asked the Journal:

"Since we do not want the KKK out here in our community, and since we cannot count on protection from the county police, is there anything wrong in taking care of our community ourselves?"

The Journal printed the letter and replied editorially: "If the question is a suggestion of violence against Klansmen, we say that such violence could not be extenuated (approved)."

The four residents of Cooke's District wrote that when others objected to the Klansmen's presence and called county police "one was arrested and the others told either to go home or go to jail."

They added that "in about an hour three motor policemen came at the head of 50 cars of Klansmen . . .

"To see such an organization being protected by policemen, whose salaries are being paid by our tax money," they wrote, "is too much."

Fulton Police Chief Neal Ellis commented: "It is our duty to be anywhere there is a parade . . . looks to me like it was better for the police to be there to observe what was going on than off somewhere else."

Ellis said the only man arrested in the Coow district the night of the parade, last Saturday, was booked for driving while intoxicated.

Womble Shot Wilkerson, Inquest Told

Robert S. Wilkerson, 34, former convict, who slew a policeman last Thursday, was killed by a bullet from the gun of the slain policeman's partner, a coroner's jury learned yesterday at an inquest into the double shooting.

After deliberating only 10 minutes, the jury exonerated the partner, Pvt. Harvey C. Womble of the Ninth Precinct, on grounds of justifiable homicide.

Single Bullet Fatal

Wilkerson died of a single bullet wound in the head after blasting Corpl. Grady A. Beacham, 40, with a shotgun when Beacham and Womble entered a home at 1601 Montello ave. ne. to serve a warrant on Wilkerson.

Before he died, Beacham fired two shots at Wilkerson from his Colt revolver. At the same time, Womble, standing directly behind Beacham, fired six shots from his Smith and Wesson. The coroner's jury was told that ballistics tests indicated a bullet from Womble's gun killed Wilkerson.

Justifiable Homicide

In returning a verdict of justifiable homicide, the jury found that Womble had acted in defense of his own life and in his capacity as a police officer in maintaining an arrest after a felony had been committed in his presence.

Beacham and Womble had gone to the Montello ave. house after its occupant, Mrs. Elizabeth Armstrong, who had sworn out the warrant to keep Wilkerson away from her, reported to police that he was there. Wilkerson was in a bedroom and fired when Beacham burst in the door.

Proposal to Reduce Pinball License Fees Wins Committee Approval

A proposal for reducing license fees on pinball machines in arcades and similar establishments was approved yesterday by the District Regulations Committee, Assistant Corporation Counsel Chester H. Gray, chairman, disclosed yesterday.

Under this plan, the fee will remain at present rate of $12 each or $36 for the first three machines, but will then be $12 for each additional three or less, with a maximum of $100 to be paid by any single establishment.

The fee reduction plan was proposed by License Superintendent Chatham T. Nottingham.

The pinball regulations were adopted September 9

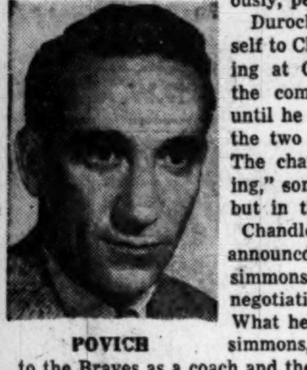
This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

LEO DUROCHER will be back on the beaten track next week, called on the carpet by Baseball Commissioner A. B. Chandler for another command appearance. Leo has been naughty again, it seems, and the commissioner is poised to paddle him, not too vigorously, perhaps, but at least purposefully.



POVICH

Durocher has his orders to present himself to Chandler at 11 o'clock Monday morning at Chicago's Blackstone Hotel where the commissioner will be holding court until he presides over the joint meeting of the two major leagues later in the week. The charge against Durocher is "tampering," sometimes a grievous baseball crime, but in this case not particularly heinous.

Chandler didn't like it when the Giants announcde that they had signed Freddie Fitzsimmons as a coach for next season after negotiations between Durocher and Fitz. What he didn't like was the fact that Fitzsimmons, at the time, was under contract to the Braves as a coach and thereby their property, and inviolate.

So, imagine the surprise of the Braves when they read in the papers that Fitzsimmons had succumbed to Durocher's blandishments without so much as an if-you-please by either party. That was neither cricket, nor baseball.

HOWEVER, the Braves after recovering from their initial jolt, discovered they weren't very angry about the thing at all, and Mr. Lou Perini, who owns the team, advised Chandler that he did not want to make an issue of it. The Giants, said Perini, could have Fitzsimmons and godspeed. It wouldn't exactly wreck Boston's pennant chances for next season. The Giants, of course, would take him, and everybody was happy about it except Chandler.

In Chandler's view, the Braves' consent to the transfer came too late. It was tampering on New York's part and he can't countenance that. He's taking action against the Giants, he says, for the good of the game. The next thing the Braves know, some club might tamper with such as Johnny Sain or Warren Spahn, their good pitchers, and then they'd scream.

So Chandler is in no mood to let the Giants get away unpunished, however mild was this particular offense. To recoin a phrase, it's the principle of the thing which is moving Chandler and the fact that Durocher is the whipping boy once more happens to be mere coincidence.

THE COMMISSIONER was never so securely in the saddle as at this time, and the baseball people are beginning to fear his displeasure no less than they quaked when the late Judge Landis started clearing his throat before handing down a ruling. And there are multiple reasons for the respect of the commissioner, including the new high prosperity of the baseball business. Baseball never had it so good.

That latter fact was pointed up by yesterday's editions which announced that the eighth-place Chicago White Sox had offered $100,000 and three players for Bob Dillinger, the Browns' third baseman. When a last-place club can go into the market to that extent, the game must be profitable. Every club in the American League made money last season, and the same is probably true of the clubs in the National.

In the first year of his reign, there was a movement by certain dissidents to unseat Chandler, but he out-toughed 'em and whipped them into line, and there is now no thought of revolt against the commissioner. In the first year of his 7-year contract he warned the magnates of any mutiny by threatening them with "the seven-year itch."

OUT OF ALL of his crackdowns, Chandler has emerged as a bigger figure in the game. Leslie O'Connor, former No. 1 aid of Commissioner Landis, who challenged Chandler's knowledge and application of the baseball laws, was properly sat-upon and disciplined. He resigned as general manager of the White Sox within a year.

A few weeks ago, when Chandler cracked down on the Detroit Tigers, setting 12 of their rookies free for contract irregularities—one of whom was signed by the Yankees for $40,000 as a free agent—he pulled no punches. The fact that Walter O. Briggs and Billy Evans of the Tigers were among his stanchest friends didn't dter Chandler's action.

Chandler is not trying to out-tough Landis, but he's proud of his cold eye if one is warranted. Without batting it, he saw his duty during his terms as Governor of Kentucky and signed the death warrants of 24 convicted men. He prefers his work be pleasant, but he's no softie.

Caldwell Named Navy Athletic Head

Annapolis, Md., Dec. 7 (AP).—A Navy captain who has been "closely associated" with Football Coach George Sauer this past season was chosen today as Navy's athletic director.

Capt. Howard Caldwell, 43, former Antarctic explorer and World War II combat hero, will take over the job to be relinquished February 1 by his 1927 classmate, Capt. Tom Hamilton.

Hamilton yesterday accepted the post as athletic director at the University of Pittsburgh.

At the same time another shift in Navy's setup was in the making. It was learned that Jerry Flynn, who for two years has been publicity director for the atheltic associtaion, urned in his resignation.

He and Sauer Close

The new athletic director has been head of the department of mathematics at the Naval Academy since last June. He also has been officer representative for football.

Rear Admiral James L. Holloway, jr., academy superintendent, said after announcement of the appointment that as officer representative Captain Caldwell "was closely associated with Coach George Sauer and the Navy varsity football squad" this fall.

Captain Caldwell is a former member of the Navy coaching staff, in charge of the junior varsity from 1934 to 1937.

He was wartime commander of Air Group 12 based on the carrier Saratoga, leading raids on Japanese installations at Rabaul and other Pacific islands. Caldwell holds the Navy Cross, Distinguished Flying Cross and other decorations.

Caldwell was with Admiral Richard E. Byrd's Antarctic expedition in 1946. While on that assignment he was lost for two weeks with the crew of a patrol plane, which crashed near the South Pole.

He's a Californian

Caldwell was born at Rocklin, Calif., but calls both Sparks, Nev., and Roseville, Calif., his home towns. He attended the University of Nevada in 1922 and 1923. He is married and has two children, Joyce, 15, and Hank, 13.

There was no formal announcement about Flynn's departure from the academy and spokesmen said there would be none immediately. There was no hint of Flynn's plans although he said he would not follow Hamilton to Pittsburgh.

The 29-year-old publicity director is a resident of Rochester, N.Y., and is a reserve lieutenant and took over the job in April, 1946.

Jim Tatum, head football coach at the University of Maryland, paid an hour's visit late in the day. Tatum said he was only there to "get acquainted" with Caldwell.

"I'm just visiting," Tatum said.

Caldwell was fullback on the 1926 team when Hamilton was quarterback and both graduated the next year.

Last-Place Jets Hit 36 Of 99 Shots From Floor

Indianapolis, Dec. 7.—Hitting 36 of their 99 floor shots for a shooting average of .363 while the league-leading Caps were firing only .257, the hungry Indianapolis Jets whacked Washington, 94-78, before 4492 howling Hoosiers at the Butler Field house tonight.

New Coach Leads Jets to Victory

Indianapolis, Dec. 7 (AP).—Burl Friddle, one of the all-time greats of Indiana basketball, was named coach of the Indianapolis Jets of the Basketball Association of America before tonight's game with Washington.

Friddle takes over from Bruce Hale, who has been player-coach since mid-season last year. Hale will remain as a player.

The Jet victory snapped a 15-game winning streak for the visitors, the last unbeaten team in the Basketball Association of America, but didn't affect their standing in the Eastern Division where the Caps are sitting on a fat lead.

The success was only the fourth in 17 games for the Jets, under heavy fire here for their poor showing in their first year as BAA members.

Washington led at the end of the first 12 minutes, 23-19, but left the floor at the half behind, 43-40.

Led by little Ray Lumpp, the Jets propelled themselves ahead permanently late in the third quarter. From then on, the only question was how large their margin would be.

They had a 68-57 gap between them and the Caps heading into the last period.

The Caps played without Fred Scolari, who has twisted his left ankle twice playing and once just walking in the last 10 days. He will join the club in Chicago this weekend.

Lumpp, with nine baskets and 10 of his 16 free-throw attempts made good, was the principal force behind the Jets' upset. Bruce Hale got 23 points, but 10 of these came on easy breakaways in the last quarter when the Caps were trying to find the combination to the field house baskets.

Horace (Bones) McKinney, with six baskets and five straight free throws, was the only Cap who played well at both ends of the floor.

The Caps threw 109 times at the hoop and hit only 28 times. They needled 22 of the 25 free throws awarded them but obtained no advantage in this direction because they provided the Jets with 42 attempts (one on a technical foul handed Cap Coach Arnold Auerbach), and the down trodden home club managed to score 22.

Shires Charged With Murder Of Hi Erwin, Ex-Ball Player

Dallas, Tex., Dec. 7 (AP).—Art Shires, former major league first baseman, was charged with murder today in the death of W. H. (Hi) Erwin, 56, former professional baseball player.

Erwin, 56, died in a hospital here Saturday. Officers quoted Shires as saying he had a fight with Erwin October 3. Shires was questioned last night and released on a $5000 bond in a habeas corpus writ.

The murder charge, filed in the court of Justice of the Peace W. L. Sterrett, charged murder with malice aforethought.

Certificate Withheld

Erwin was buried today, but the death certificate had not been signed early tonight.

Shires, 42, operates a shrimp house in Dallas. He told police he had known Erwin for 25 years. Erwin operated a Dallas cleaning and pressing shop.

Shires was questioned and held last night and then released on a $5000 writ bond which will remain in effect until tomorrow when he will hear a formal reading of the charges. It is believed a new bond will be set tomorrow.

Shires Is Silent

The charge said that Shires "wilfully and with malice aforethought killed William Hiram Erwin by beating him with his, the defendant's fists and stomping him with his, the defendant's feet."

Informed of the charge, Shires said he had "no comment."

Dr. P. A. Rogers, one of the physicians who examined Erwin, said he found that Erwin died from hypostatic pneumonia and cirrhosis of the liver with contributing causes being blows to the head, chest and abdomen.

An autopsy showed that blows received in a fight contributed to Erwin's death. Police entered the case when Erwin's physician reported he believed the former ballplayer died of internal injuries suffered in a fight.

Shires was quoted by Dallas detectives as saying he had gone to Erwin's place of business on October 3 to give him a steak.

"He hit me across the face with a telephone receiver and I knocked him down without thinking," the detectives quoted Shires as saying. "I had to rough him up a good deal because he grabbed a knife and started whittling on my legs."

Shires had been with the Chicago White Sox, Washington Senators, Boston Braves and St. Louis Cardinals.

Erwin, one of six brothers who played in organized baseball, once was a catcher for Dallas in the Texas League and umpired in the American Association

Art Shires, self-styled "Whattaman" of baseball, cut a fancier figure off the diamond than on it during his three-year career in the majors that included a brief sojourn with the Nats.

He established himself as a "character" after joining the Chicago White Sox in 1928, and he did succeed to the regular first-base job with the White Sox. But after punching Manager Lena Blackburne in the eye in an off-the-field affray, he was traded to Washington in 1930.

Shires took a whirl at professional boxing in the off-season of 1929-30, and knocked out Dan Daly in the first round of a fight at Chicago. He was later suspended by the Michigan, Illinois and New York State Boxing Commissions after a manager of one of his opponents claimed his fighter was propositioned to "take a dive."

Landis Warned Art

Previously, the late Kenesaw Mountain Landis called a halt to Shires' fistic career. Following a dull four-round bout with George Trafton, huge tackle of the Chicago Bears, Landis threatened Shires with expulsion from baseball if he fought publicly again.

Clark Griffith, never the one to overlook showmanship possibilities, brought Shires to Washington in a trade that sent Pitcher Garland Braxton to the White Sox. Griffith was smitten also, however, with Shires' first basing and hitting talents and valued him as a replacement for the aging Joe Judge.

Actually, it was Shires' second term with the Washington club. Back in 1925, he tried out for the Nats as a pitcher under the name of Robert Lowe, without signing a contract. In 1926, he drifted to Waco of the Texas League and went from that team to the White Sox.

He Hit .302 for Nats

In Washington in 1930, the stocky, curly-headed Shires was distinguished chiefly for the huge plug of tobacco he liked to chew, and his flamboyant cream-colored luggage boldly labeled Art "The Great" Shires.

He batted .302 with the Nats, chiefly as a utility first baseman and was never able to replace the veteran Judge. Washington sold him to Milwaukee in 1931 after his .381 batting average with that club won him a new major league trial with the Braves. He suffered a torn ligament in 1932 in spring training, and was put on the voluntary retired list.

The St. Louis Cardinals bought Shires' contract from the Braves in 1933 and he was reinstated with the Cardinals' Columbus, Ohio, farm, of the American Association. Later in the same year he was fined $200 for signing false affidavits in connection with his contract with Columbus.

In 1934, he drifted to Fort Worth of the Texas League, and then quit baseball. He returned to boxing in 1935, and obscurity as a sports figure.

Georgetown rolled to a 91-41 victory over Fort Belvoir in its basketball opener last night at Catholic University gym.

The Hoyas, whose next step is Madison Square Garden Saturday when they meet NYU, took all of 6 minutes and 20 seconds to notch their first field goal.

Soph Dan Supkis, 6-foot-7 Long Islander, took high-scoring honors with 16 points. Right behind was Italo Abiondi with 15.

Tommy O'Keefe and Captain Ray Corley, respective leaders last season, tallied 11 and 10 points.

Providence Wins, Ends Streak at 9

Rochester, N. Y., Dec. 7 (AP).—The lowly Providence Steamrollers tripped the Rochester Royals, 90 to 89, before 3560 fans tonight in a Basketball Association of America upset.

The victory ended a nine-game losing skein for the Rollers and snapped a five-game winning streak for the Royals.

Trailing by 11 points at one stage of the third period, Providence rallied to take a brief one-point lead in the same period. The Royals went back in front at the period end, however, 69-66.

In the final wild fourth frame, Rochester's first platoon opened up an 86 to 79 bulge with 3½ minutes remaining to play, but the Rollers came on again and grabbed a 90-87 edge with 30 seconds left.

Colts Sign Game Pact With Variety

Baltimore, Dec. 7 (AP).—The Baltimore Colts of the All America Professional Football Conference and the Variety Club signed a three-year contract today for a series of preseason exhibition games in Babe Ruth Stadium.

The Baltimore Variety Club share of the proceeds will go in its Police Boys Clubs fund.

R. C. Embry, pdesident of the Colts, said the contract calls for the opponent to be a "suitable" team to be selected by the Variety Club and the Colt management.

GW, VPI Play In Armory's First Game

By Jack Walsh
Post Reporter

Somewhat chastened George Washington opens the collegiate basketball season at the National Guard Armory tonight, meeting VPI in a Southern Conference test.

In another local game, Wilson Teachers will be entertained at Brookland by Catholic U. American U. travels to Charlottesville to face unbeaten Virginia and Howard will play at Lock Haven, Pa., Teachers.

GW received a 66-37 basketball lesson Monday at Raleigh from North Carolina State's strong defending champs.

Double Bills Coming Up

Both Georgetown and George Washington will use the Armory for home games. And they're teaming up to present three attractive doubleheaders later in the season. In the first of these, January 29, the great North Carolina State club will play a return engagement and the Hoyas meet Villanova, which already looks like one of the best teams in the East.

GW hopes to erase the memory of its N. C. State thumping by taking into camp once-beaten VPI. If it does, it can boast a .500 average in Southern Conference play. In the prelim, GW Frosh plays Anacostia High at 7 p. m.

Staff Cassell is elated over his American U. Eagles. They've just taken three of four games away and it's the best road trip they've had in Cassel's eight years as coach. American surprised strong Connecticut, 50-47, for its most eventful triumph.

In Virginia, the Eagles face a team that's averaging 75 points a game. The Cavaliers already have dusted off three independent foes.

Don Black Reported 'Good' After Surgery

Cleveland, Dec. 7 (U.P.).—Don Black, Cleveland Indians pitcher, underwent a "dangerous" brain operation today, and a report from Charity Hospital said his condition was "good."

Black went into surgery at noon and remained in the operating room for nearly five hours for what was described as "a painstaking operation for removal of an aneurysm."

An aneurysm is "a weak spot in a blood vessel," according to Dr. Spencer Braden, brain specialist, who performed the operation.

Dr. Braden said he believed the aneurysm caused the cerebral hemorrhage which Black suffered in a game with the St. Louis Browns here September 13.

The right-hander was hospitalized until October 24 and has suffered from headaches since.

Maxim Beats Jimmy Bivins

By his victory, the handsome Clevelander earned a probable bout with Jersey Joe Walcott here January 13.

Both judges cast their ballots for Maxim but Referee Jackie Davis, who several times found it necessary to urge both men to fight, voted for Bivins.

Maxim kept Bivins completely bewildered with his left jabs and hooks. Maxim's best rounds were the seventh, eighth and tenth. In all three he beat Bivins to the punch and connected with hard jabs and hooks.

Uline Rejects Offer for Caps

Owner Mike Uline yesterday announced that he has rejected two substantial offers to dispose of Washington Cap players.

"Both offers were good ones and the last party asked me to name my own price," Uline said last night." But I don't intend to get rid of my players at any price."

Uline said that both parties proposed purchasing the Capitols as a unit, and outright.

Lynn Waldorf of California was second with 33 votes and Bob Voights of Northwestern, whom Waldorf meets in the Rose Bowl, was third with 22. Waldorf won the honor in 1935. Clemson's Frank Howard was fourth.

—Student Paper Asks Regents:—

Give Stuhldreher Confidence Vote or End His Services

Madison, Wis., Dec. 7 (AP).—The University of Wisconsin student newspaper asked the school's regents today to clarify a "wishy-washy" attitude with a definite stand on the future of Head Football Coach Harry Stuhldreher.

Sports Editor Hal Phillips of the Daily Cardinal said in an editorial that officials "have been treating too lightly recent squabblings concerning the situation" and asked the board of regents "to either give Stuhldreher a vote of confidence or tell him his service here has ended."

Stuhldreher, in his thirteenth year as Wisconsin coach, was under fire all fall as his team lost seven of nine games and wound up in the Western Conference cellar.

The Wisconsin student board meets tonight to set a date for a referendum on the question: "Should Stuhldreher be retained as coach?"

A campus petition, signed by more than 700 students, asked for the vote, the result of which would be advisory only.

Lions Finally Win, 5 to 4

The Washington Lions broke a lengthy arid spell of seven winless games last night at Uline Arena by whipping the New Haven Ramblers, 5-4. The historic event was witnessed by 1638 spectators.

The Lions piled up an incredulous 5-2 lead which held until late in the last period when New Haven forwards closed in and scored two goals.

In a furious last-minute bid to tie the game, the Ramblers sent six men screaming down the ice, but the Lion defense and Goalie Lew Crowdis were impregnable despite the lack of Win Mousseau who was being punished for tripping.

It was a remarkable awakening for the Lions who were 9-0 pushovers the last time New Haven played here.

Bednarik Named Lineman of Year In Poll by UP

New York, Dec. 7 (U.P.).—Charles Bednarik, the University of Pennsylvania's All-America center, today was named lineman of the year in a United Press Nationwide poll of sports writers and broadcasters.

It was the third major honor accorded the 220-pound Penn co-captain within a week. Before he had been named on the United Press All-America team for the second consecutive year and was the Maxwell Club's choice for its annual player of the year award.

Bednarik ran away with the lineman of the year poll, receiving 115 of the 301 votes cost. His closest rival, Guard Bill Fischer of Notre Dame, received 48 votes and Guard Paul Burris of Oklahoma, was third with 22. Northwestern Center Alex Sarkisian was next with 19 votes, followed by Ends Richard Rifenburg of Michigan, and Leon Hart of Notre Dame, each with 11.

Sam Baugh Signs Up for 1949, His 13th Year With Redskins

Sammy Baugh yesterday signed a contract for the 1949 season, his thirteenth as a member of the Washington Redskins.

The announcement halted those rumors, always current at this time of the year, that the old pass master is about to retire to his Texas ranch and take life easy.

As usual, no mention was made of anything as sordid as money, but it's generally thought that Baugh works for around $18,000 a year.

Actually Baugh seems to be improving as he goes along, and the record books prove it. He has been around so long that it's only natural that he should hold every lifetime passing record in the National Football League books.

But last year Baugh also set new season records for number of passes thrown, passes completed and yards picked up by same.

And this season, against the Boston Yanks, he set another record by picking up 446 yards with his passes, the most ever made in an NFL game. He holds the best percentage of pass completions too, at 58.6.

Laurel Raceway Sued for $75,000 By Building Firm

Baltimore, Dec. 7 (AP).—A $75,000 suit was initiated in Federal Court here today against the Laurel Harness Racing Association, Inc.

The A. R. Williams Iron and Bronze Co., Inc., of New York charged it had not been paid the $10,000 balance due for building a grandstand at the new harness racing park and was owed for other work done after the stands were built.

It opened with many of its facilities still in the process of construction and then was plagued by persistent rains. Harness race fans gave the track a big play, however.

Butler Wins Big Race of Day

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

Charles Town, W. Va., Dec. 7.—A thrilling dead heat and a one-length victory by a topnotch handicap horse were the highlights of the Tuesday program of the Charles Town Jockey Club.

When it came to finishes, however, a pair of $1250 platers took the cake. W. R. Hardesty's Air Defense and Mrs. Stanley Green, sr.'s Battletown were locked going into the wire and the camera, the judges and a magnifying glass could not separate them.

The bigtime steed to win was J. H. Hammond's Butler. The 6-year-old who won handicaps at Bowie in 1947 and 1948 showed his mettle today in the Gregory Purse, featuring the card. Despite his rather narrow margin of victory Butler was under only light handling at the end.

The dead heat came in the fourth race which drew eight claimers for a test of about seven furlongs. Air Defense had Jockey Emile Carrillo aboard while Battletown had Apprentice F. D. (Chico) Rivera up. Both horses and both boys gave everything they had.

Claimers in Dead Heat

The pair hooked up approaching the stretch after Battletown had set the pace and Air Defense had moved up. From that point into the wire it was a dog-eat-dog battle. Air Defense appeared to have licked his rival in midstretch but little Rivera and Battletown refused to give up. Going into the wire, it was either's race. A dead head was a fitting decision.

In the divided payoff Air Defense paid $3.80, $4, and $2.60, while Battletown returned $5.40, $4.60 and $3.20. The pair were timed in 1:34 4/5 for the route.

Butler, beaten in an abbreviated sprint here last week, made good today for the favorite players who were satisfied with the $3.60 win mutuel. He had Apprentice Bob Barrett (no relation) in the saddle and turned back, among others, C. B. Carter's War Story and H. B. Cohen's Cordon.

Fancy Answer did most of the front running with several others close up. However, Barrett rode Butler along in the center of the track and sent the gelding around the leaders to get to the front. In the stretch, War Story, who had some early trouble, closed gamely but only to narrow the lead of the coasting Butler.

Jockey Jimmy Baird rode two winners for E. B. Townsend on the card. He was aboard Wye Care, an $8.20 shot in the third race and also had the mount on Maryknoll at $13.20 in the fifth. His ride on the latter was a masterpiece.

The daily double paid $30.40 with C. F. Wright's Verte and L. Donofiro's Magic Heels winning the key races.

Jones, Cooper On Fight Card

The demand of fight addicts for an all eight-round card has been paid due heed by Matchmaker Gabe Menendez in his arrangements for next Monday night's show at Turner's Arena.

One of the four eight-rounders offered will see the return to action of Herbie (Biff) Jones. The familiar District lightweight will fight Freddie Smith, Ray Robinson's New York stablemate.

Featherweight Jimmy Cooper is another Menendez "regular" who'll be featured next week. Jimmy's competition has not yet been selected. The other two bouts are still in the discussion stage.

Florida Football Going Big Time

Orlando, Fla., Dec. 7 (AP).—University of Florida alumni will embark on a four-year football program calling for the expenditure of nearly a half-million dollars annually to reestablish the Gators as a Southern gridiron power.

The over-all program, which resulted from an eight-month period of research and planning by Mathey's committee, calls for the increase from the present 80 to a minimum of 110 of football scholarships available to the university football coaching staff.

Sports Group Asked to Raise $14,000 for March of Dimes

Sports in Washington again will be called upon to make a substantial contribution to the March of Dimes campaign for combating polio.

Lee Field, chairman of the sports group, outlined plans to committee members at a luncheon at the Touchdown Club yesterday.

Boxing, basketball, bowling and other winter sports will be asked to contribute toward a goal of $14,000 for Washington. Dates of the drive are January 13-30, but some sports events may be held later.

Among suggestions made at yesterday's luncheon were:

1. That Washington Caps, sensational leaders of the Basketball Association of America, meet four or five of the local college teams in 8 or 10-minute games, all on the same night at Uline Arena;

2. That Beau Jack, popular lightweight, meet the winner of Wednesday night's Sonny Boy West-Stonewall Jackson fight, with part of the receipts going to the polio fund.

A percentage of receipts of all regularly scheduled sports events held in Washington during the campaign also will be sought.

End John Trent Will Captain Army

West Point, Dec. 7 (AP).—John Trent of Memphis, Tenn., an end, was elected today to captain the 1949 Army football team.

He succeeds Center Bill Yeoman, who led the Cadets through their recent undefeated season.

D. C. Title At Stake in Uline Bout

Now that the stormy litigation about his style is ironed out, Stonewall Jackson is all set to swarm all over Sonny Boy West tonight in their 12-round, District lightweight championship bout at Uline Arena.

Jackson, through his manager Billy Edwards, has been pestering the dickens out of the D. C. Boxing Commission to let him alone in tonight's fight. Edwards says his boy was "handcuffed" and had to fight clean in his last bout with West so he was knocked out in the eighth round.

The commission obliged by saying it didn't care what he did as long as he didn't break any rules. This satisfied Edwards and his Stonewall.

Different Views

So now Stonewall is free to come out with his arms flailing the way he likes, knockout Sonny Boy, and drape himself in that dazzling championship belt, Edwards thinks. Sonny Boy, naturally, doesn't see it that way at all.

The belt has a good home, he thinks, and after about five rounds of work on Stonewall's midriff, the belt should stay put.

West hasn't had all his way in the feud. A few months ago, Jackson outpointed him in Baltimore in their first encounter. Sonny Boy's got the smart money behind him at 7-5 tonight.

Interesting supporting bouts will be headlined by a scheduled six-round semifinal, pairing Art Bethea and Johnny Holt, local middleweights. Four-rounders list Matthew Daniels against Tee Edwards, middleweights; Herman Johnson against Russell Ruhner, lightweights, and Ray Hanbury against Al Jones, welterweights.

George Becker Hedds District Grid Officials

At the annual meeting of the Washington District Football Officals Association last night, George Becker was elected president for the 1949 season.

Becker, who is director of physical education at Georgetown University, is also a member of the Eastern Intercollegiate Football Officials Association.

Other officers elected were Frank Meglen, vice president; Tom Sullivan, secretary-treasurer, and Francis Holbrook and Harry English, board members.

Mike Tracy, who has been football commissioner for the past six years was reelected for another two-year term.

Nead Wrestles Sharkey Tonight

Wilbur Nead and Babe Sharkey meet tonight for this week's wrestling championship of Turner's Arena. Nead has ad libbed his way through 100 matches without ever having been "beaten."

Two bad boys, Lavern Baxter and Michel Leone, will try to get worse in a supporting exhibit. The rest of the cast includes Marvin Mercer with Stu Hart against Bibber McCoy with Jesse James; and Hans Kampfer against Joe Kamaroff.

Nolting Ousted At Cincinnati

Cincinnati, Dec. 7 (AP).—Ray Nolting, 35, head football coach at the University of Cincinnati for the past four years, was ousted today by unanimous vote of the U.C. board of directors.

The directors also voted not to renew Nolting's contract as an assistant professor in the University's Teachers' College, Nolting's coaching contract expires in February. The UC team just completed its poorest season since Nolting took over in 1945. The 1948 Bearcats won three games, lost six and tied one.

Rullo Rejoins Warriors

Philadelphia, Dec. 7 (AP).—Jerry Rullo, a member of the Philadelphia Warriors during the 1946-47 season, today rejoined the Basketball Association of America team. He will be in the lineup when the Warriors oppose the Baltimore Bullets tomorrow night at the Arena.

Proposal Would Put 6 Existing Agencies In New Department

A new Department of Transportation which would be made up of at least six Federal agencies is being debated behind closed doors by the Hoover Commission.

It was recommended by the 12-man commission which was set up to study Government reorganization by its task-force on Government transportation problems—the Brookings Institution. The proposed new cabinet-ranking department would be composed of these agencies:

The Coast Guard, which would be transferred to it from the Treasury Department:

The Public Roads Administration, which is now a part of the Federal Works Agency;

The Maritime Commission, which is an independent agency operated by a five-man board, and,

Three agencies which would be transferred from the Commerce Department to the new department—the Civil Aeronautics Administration, the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and the Inland Waterways Corporation.

Also slated for transfer to the new department would be the "nonregulatory" functions of both the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Civil Aeronautics Board. For example, the safety and enforcement functions of both of these independent agencies would be made a part of the new department.

Considerable Saving Cited

Both ICC and CAB would continue as independent agencies to fix rail and air rates respectively, to issue certificates of convenience, etc. The report is said to have emphasized that the proposed new department would be an "administrative" agency and that regulatory functions would be kept in the existing agencies.

The report estimated that considerable money could be saved if the department was created—savings in personnel, housekeeping functions, etc.

It is not suggested that the Federal Communications Commission be made a part of the proposed new department as was once rumored. In fact, the FCC task force recommended that agency be continued on an independent basis.

At one point, it's reported, the Brookings task force considered the outright transfer of the entire ICC and CAB to the new department. In that event it would have recommended the creation of a 15-man board with semijudicial powers in the department to fix rates for all carriers and to issue regulations controlling them.

Some thought also is reported to have been given to a possible merger of the ICC and CAB and the creation of a new and independent board to regulate public transportation systems. This plan would have been contingent on the transfer of the agencies' "nonregulatory" activities to the proposed Department of Transportation.

The Brookings plan is said to have been favorably received by the Hoover group. A department made up of the Government's transportation agencies has been debated for years in and out of Government.

TOP SALARIES: The bill to raise the salaries of top Federal executives will get the support of a bipartisan group.

The views of President Truman will be revealed Monday when Budget Director James Webb appears as the first witness before a three-man subcommittee of the Senate Civil Service Committee.

Former President Herbert Hoover will be the star witness on the following day. Both the President and Mr. Hoover can be expected to go down the line for higher salaries for top-bracket employes. Other witnesses will be:

Arthur S. Flemming, a Hoover Commission member who is president of Ohio Wesleyan University; Robert Ramspeck, former chairman of the House Civil Service Committee, who is vice president of the Air Transport Association; John Stevenson, president, Pennsylvania Mutual Life Insurance Co., who, like Ramspeck, worked on the personnel report for the Hoover Commission, and Comptroller General Lindsey Warren.

In addition, the heads of a dozen employe unions have been asked to testify.

The bill would raise the salaries of 200-odd top officials from $500 to $8000 a year. Cabinet members would be boosted from $15,000 to $20,000. The top-layer group in the executive branch hasn't been given a pay raise in years. Senator Flanders (R., Vt.), who has joined with Senators O'Conor (D., Md.) and Baldwin (R., Conn.) in sponsoring the bill, said yesterday the President must either appoint people of independent wealth or persuade them to make sacrifices to take top jobs.

REVENUE: Arthur J. Seaton, a lawyer for the United States Tax Court, has been appointed to one of the $10,000 vacancies on the Excess Profits Tax Council.

OUTLOOK: Chairman Langer of the Senate Civil Service Committee, is most optimistic over the prospect of another "substantial" pay raise for all Federal workers. He believes the new Congress will be more liberal than the dying Eightieth Congress. 13th Change Sets Death Date Friday For 2 Killers

Wheeler, Patton Hear Sentence; Appealing Today To High Court

Reginald J. Wheeler, 28, and Jesse James Patton, 23, convicted holdup-murderers, were sentenced yesterday in District Court to die Friday in the electric chair at District Jail.

It was the thirteenth time the two men have appeared in the court to hear their date with death changed. They were convicted late in 1946 of shooting Maurice L. Bernstein on June 5 of that year during the course of a daylight robbery.

New Appeal Today

Judge Alexander Holtzoff set the date to give attorneys a chance to go to the Supreme Court with the case for the third time. The petitions are to be filed today.

The lawyers are appealing a habeas corpus denial. They contend there was perjured evidence used, and also claim that two years must elapse between the date of judgment in the case and execution. The final judgment was in January, 1948.

With Heads Shaven

The two doomed men came to court with their heads shaven. Last Friday they were readied for the lethal chair only to have a stay granted by the courts at virtually the last moment.

As Judge Holtzoff read off their sentence date, Wheeler kept his tongue in his cheek and at moments smiled. Patton looked out of the window into the sunshine.

They smoked cigarettes as they were led from the courthouse. When he saw the jail van, Patton cracked, "I see you've got your cab here."

Lily Pons Is Hailed Here By Admirers

By Paul Hume

The Washington Chapter of the Lily Pons Fan Club gathered last night in Constitution Hall.

The reason was, naturally, the presence of their chief joy. Accompanied by Frank LaForge, with Frank Versaci playing convenient flute obbligatos, the diminutive French coloratura ranged through songs and arias from her native land. Excursions into America brought forth two new songs by LaForge, while England and Italy contributed arias demanding notes from the higher altitudes.

Outstanding songs on the program were those of Milhaud, Ravel, Poulenc, Hue and Debussy. Companioning these was Liszt's setting of "Comment disaient-ils?" Miss Pons' vocal habits are familiar to this country, where her name is almost a household word. She has a friendly presence on stage which endears her to most of her beholders.

There were moments in the evening when she communicated sensitive musical ideas. Most of the time, however, vagaries of pitch, and her ubiquitous use of interposing "h's" into phrases which should be legato made listening less than pleasant.

It is an interesting fact that every time Miss Pons approaches her highest tones, her head turns to the left. Since our seats were on her right, you can imagine how left out this made us feel after the third or fourth time.

The simplest songs came off best. The coloratura work is losing its luster and ease, which is the time for these high-flying sopranos to eliminate them from the repertoire. Lily Pons will obviously be welcomed warmly to Washington whenever she wishes to return. She was gracious enough to give at least four encores.

Two Indicted For Murder Of Druggist

Men Are Charged With Holdup-Slaying Of Nathaniel Johnson

Two men were indicted here yesterday as the holdup slayers of Nathaniel Johnson, 53, a druggist murdered October 12 at his shop at 600 3d st. sw.

Charged with first-degree murder by the District grand jury were Lawrence Goodall, 24, of 412 Oakdale pl. nw., and Edward Jackson, jr., 25, 364 Dixon ct. sw.

According to police, Goodall held the murder weapon, a .45-caliber automatic pistol and pumped a bullet from 10-foot range into the back of Johnson. Jackson was charged as the lookout man in the alleged robbery-shooting.

Court papers showed that Goodall and Jackson first met at the National Training School and had been drinking together the night of the felony.

Indicted for rape was Amiel G. Turner, 33, of 1245 Army and Navy dr., Arlington, Va. According to police, Turner assaulted a 36-year-old divorcee in Rock Creek Park November 18, after promising to drive her home from a "gill joint" on Portner pl. nw.

Second-degree murder was the indictment charge in the fatal stabbing of John Alexander, 37, 740 7th st. sw., on September 21. Indicted for it was Robert Bennett, 37, also of 740 7th st. sw., who claimed, police said, that the fight leading up to the stabbing was caused by a charge of "damn liar" flung by Alexander.

Anthony J. Forte and Victor R. Forte, both said to reside at the Willard Hotel, were charged with false pretenses and grand larceny in receiving $21,000 in checks for a power shovel which, it is alleged, they had no right to sell.

Charged with operation of a lottery and possession of numbers slips were: Carlyn C. Kelly, 35, 941 Westminster st. nw.; Ollie Cooper, 42, 66 T st. nw.; James R. Rivers, 31, 1828 T st. nw.; James C. LeSeur, 41, 1022 7th st. ne.; William H. Foster, 58, 5406 Nash st. nw.; Schuyler Wilson, 29, of 2655 41st st. nw., and Walter S. Lephfew, 43, 2655 41st st. nw.

Patterson Butler To Be Questioned For Second Day

Archie Robert Lye, butler for the late Eleanor M. Patterson, was questioned all day yesterday in the contest over the Patterson will, and the questioning will be continued today.

Attorneys for executors named in the will are taking a pretrial deposition from Lye, whose signature appeared as a witness to the second codicil of the will. That codicil removed from the will Charles B. Porter, former Times-Herald treasurer and financial adviser to Mrs. Patterson, who plunged to his death September 14.

Lye, who now lives at the Schuyler Arms Apartments, 1954 Columbia rd. nw., was employed by Mrs. Patterson at her Dupont Circle mansion. Porter maintained a private office there, according to documents introduced in the case by attorneys for Mrs. Felicia Gizycka, daughter of Mrs. Patterson, who is challenging her mother's will.

Streetcar Driver to Be Held For Court in Woman's Death

The operator of a streetcar, which struck and killed a 73-year-old woman early Monday, was ordered held for Municipal Court action by a coroner's jury yesterday.

The jury ordered Walter T. Weaver, 62, of 2 Sycamore rd., Takoma Park, Md., held under the Negligent Homicide Act in the death of Mrs. Annie O'Connell of 1207 Decatur st. nw.

Mrs. O'Connell was crossing Georgia ave. at Decatur st. nw., on her way to mass at the Church of the Nativity, when she was struck.

An autopsy revealed she had died of a fractured skull. There were no other marks or bruises on her body.

Police testified that the accident happened shortly after 6 a. m., and that it was still dark and raining slightly. Mrs. O'Connell was wearing dark clothes and had an umbrella partly open, they said.

From scuff marks on the streetcar, they determined that she had been struck by the left side of the vehicle about 6 feet from the front. She was thrown a distance of 14 feet by the impact.

Although several witnesses testified that she was alone as she crossed the street, a passenger on the streetcar, James A. Smith, a watchman of 440 Massachusetts ave. nw., told the jury he saw a man standing beside her.

"I saw the man's hand either reach out to grab her or to deliberately push her as she swayed toward the streetcar," Smith declared.

Police said they have found no one else who saw the man that Smith alleges he saw. The police stated, however, that they can not locate the other witnesses, a Mrs. McNaulty, who was a passenger on the streetcar, and a man who boarded the streetcar a few seconds before the accident.

Weaver, who has operated streetcars for 42 years, did not take the stand. Police, however, read a written statement which he signed the day of the accident, in which he declared he did not see Mrs. O'Connell until the car was abreast of her.

Va. Sales Tax Is Predicted If General Assembly Meets

Virginians are going to get a State sales tax "whether we like it or not," George Damm, an Arlington delegate to the Virginia General Assembly, predicted yesterday. Damm predicted backers of the tax may be able to force the legislature into special session this winter for action on the sales tax proposal.

Although he said he strongly opposes it, Damm commented that, if a special session is called the State's anti-sales-taxers are "licked."

A special session may be called either by Gov. William M. Tuck, who has refused to call it thus far, or by two-thirds of the General Assembly members.

As evidence of the support which has snowballed behind the sales tax bid, Damm cited the 63 individual Virginia counties, including nearby Fairfax, which have asked for the special session.

The legislature normally would not meet until January, 1950.

Backing the sales tax, Damm said, are Virginia's rural areas, which "feel they can get more out of a sales tax than they put in."

He said population centers "would be taxed to pay for improvements in other areas." He added that he felt nonurban counties should "meet their own financial problems as Arlington did."

Arlington County residents recently voted a $4,750,000 bond issue for school construction.

State Senator Charles R. Fenwick, who also represents Arlington and opposes the sales tax, listed four separate groups he believes are backing the special tax session.

He listed them as "the school group," seeking funds immediately for a major Statewide building program; the "farm group;" the health and welfare organizations, which will "go along if funds raised are earmarked for them;" and the League of County Governments, which wants the money returned to the individual counties for use as they see fit.

Inside Fire Alarm Boxes Approved For D. C. Schools

Commission Votes For 'Remote Control' System, Climaxing Long Controversy

By Sam Zagoria
Post Reporter

District Commissioners yesterday, by a 2-to-1 vote, approved installation of "remote control" type fire alarm boxes in schools.

The decision was made after a closed hearing in which the Commissioners heard arguments by Superintendent of Communications Herbert A. Friede for this type of alarm and by Fire Chief Clement Murphy opposing.

Brig. Gen. Gordon R. Young, Engineer Commissioner, and Commissioner Guy Mason voted in favor of the "remote control" type, while John Russell Young, president of the Board of Commissioners, voted against it.

This type installation calls for a fire alarm box in the street outside the school connected with an auxiliary alarm box inside the building. Chief Murphy has recommended installation of ordinary type boxes in close proximity to the schools and none inside.

Vote Climaxes Fight

The decision climaxes a long controversy between Friede and Murphy which was aired after an argument over the type of box to install in the proposed new Birney Elementary School at Nichols ave. and Sumner rd. se.

Dr. Hobart M. Corning, superintendent of schools, recommended adoption of the "remote control" type box, and yesterday General Young told his colleagues that he favored such boxes, subject to the approval of the Board of Education.

General Young said in his opinion, "the issue is the safety of the lives of children. If a device exists which may increase the margin of safety, I am for it." He explained that the remote type permitted simultaneous evacuation of school children and summoning of fire-fighting appartus.

He cited a resolution adopted by the International Fire Chiefs Association approving the "remote" type as a "practical measure of reducing the elapsed time between the discovery of the fire and the notification of the Fire Department." He said the International Municipal Signal Association also recommended this type.

Mail Survey Made

A survey made by mail of the type alarm recommended for institutions in 24 major cities showed 13 favoring the "remote" type, 7 opposed and 4 noncommittal, General Young said.

Chief Murphy declared that in a survey of 30 cities, he had found only two using such apparatus.

The Murphy-Friede dispute has a long history. Friede at one time was fire alarm superintendent in the Fire Department. Since then, he has been made superintendent of communications and in this capacity was under fire for allegedly assisting a fire alarm equipment manufacturer obtain contracts with the District.

On a vote last April, the Commissioners split 2 to 1 over whether to dismiss him, with General Young and Mason supporting his retention.

Surgeons Seek Heart Technique

Heart surgeons are working on new techniques to correct such heart malformations as that which sent 13-year-old Claude Sine to Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore.

Thus, hope—not hopelessness—caused them to reject him as a candidate for the now famous "blue baby" operation, they disclosed in a public statement yesterday.

The statement was issued to correct misconceptions that their decision to withhold operation had doomed the Mountain Falls, Va., lad to an early death. Such published interpretations, they said, "are untrue and most regrettable."

The statement pointed out that factors motivating decision not to operate on the boy included:

1. The operative risk in such cases "is somewhat greater" than for those heart conditions for which the operation was specifically designed.

2. The fact that the Sine boy "is in satisfactory physical condition . . . and in no apparent danger of immediate death."

3. The hope that "here or elsewhere a more satisfactory operation for cases such as his will be devised in the near future."

The statement was issued, expressly, to counteract Monday's news article in The Washington Post that Sine's last hope of a normal life expectancy had faded with their decision not to operate.

Replying further to questioning about the hope for new operating techniques, a hospital spokesman declared that "specific experimental attack on his (Sine's) problem is being carried out at Johns Hopkins and elsewhere." He declined to give a progress report on such experiments, however.

In Baltimore

Agents Trap Man With 'Bad' Money

Baltimore police and Secret Service agents yesterday sprang a trap on a man carrying two rolls of bogus money as he entered a Baltimore night club.

Booked as John Acunzo, 24, of South Norwalk, Conn., he is believed to have passed the same $10 and $20 counterfeit bills that are being issued by two large rings operating from New York and Chicago in recent weeks, the Secret Service office here said last night.

Agents said many of the bills in his $629 bankroll were counterfeit, in $10 and $20 denominations, and were the type that have been turning up in many cities along the Middle Atlantic States recently.

Police also found another batch of ersatz money hidden beneath the spare tire of Acunzo's big 1948 convertible car.

Most of the passing was done in Baltimore night clubs where Acunzo had become a frequent customer, police said.

A special squad got on his trail after they had obtained a description from a Baltimore cabaret where $120 in bogus bills turned up. Police said they finally caught him through the assistance of a showgirl who had a date with him.

Baltimore police said he would be charged with possessing and passing counterfeit United States currency.

D. C. Institutions To Receive $7000 Under Hilton Will

Washington institutions will receive $7000 from the $100,000 estate of the late Mrs. Miriam B. Hilton, according to her will filed yesterday in District Court.

Her will directed that $5000 go to the George Washington University Hospital as a memorial fund in honor of her husband. An addition $1000 each goes to the Friday Morning Music Club and the National Symphony.

The bulk of her estate is placed in trust, the earnings to go to two sisters, Mrs. Fannie May Jones, of Erie, and Mrs. Alice J. Cross, of 1824 Calvert st. nw. On their deaths the trust property goes to a niece, Mrs. Elizabeth Jones Siegal, of Erie.

Cemetery Is Jinx To Fleeing Boys

No, junior, those weren't ghosts in the cemetery.

The lights? Those were police spotlights.

The cries of pain? They could have been the involuntary sort of cries produced when a policeman's shin bumps against a tombstone.

It all happened at about 12:20 a. m. yesterday in the Holy Rood Cemetery, 35th st. and Wisconsin ave. nw.

Two 16-year-old boys fled there after police surprised them in the act of breaking into stores in the 2200 block of Wisconsin ave. nw.

Leaped to the Law

One of the boys was captured when he jumped over the cemetery wall right into the arms of a night inspector, Lieut. Daniel Fletcher. The second boy eluded capture, but was taken into custody later in the day.

Seventh Precinct Pvts. Hubert Harmon and Andrew Kissal, n scout car 72, surprised the boys after they had entered a District Grocery Store, at 2205 Wisconsin ave., and Edison's Beauty Parlor at 2211.

When the boys fled into the cemetery, Harmon and Kissal radioed for help. Three scout cars, a detective bureau cruiser and a night inspector cruiser came to their aid.

For about 15 minutes, while police searchlights probed the fog-shrouded cemetery, the boys led 12 policemen a merry chase around the tombstones before one was captured and the other escaped.

Life With Father

At 10:30 a. m., the Seventh Precinct received a call from the probation office at Juvenile Court. It was holding a 16-year-old boy who had been brought in by his father because he stayed out late the previous night.

Precinct Detective Roy Schwab picked up the boy, who admitted he was the one who had escaped during the cemetery chase.

Schwab said the boy also admitted breaking into the two shops. He told the detective he stole several dollars in change and some groceries in the grocery store and a cigarette case and a knife in the beauty parlor. He also admitted three other housebreakings in the past week, Schwab said.

Both boys have prior juvenile delinquency records. They were charged with housebreaking.

Diplomas for Policemen

Nine rookie Fairfax County policemen will receive diplomas today indicating successful completion of a 42-hour general course in police instruction at the Fairfax County Police Academy.

They are Ferdinand C. Plitt, J. L. Rogers, Anson H. Roberts, Claude Lawrence, E. C. Auterback, William G. Haines, jr., D. R. O'Neil, Truman D. King and D. S. Hurst.

The short ceremony will be held at the county courthouse at 9:30 a. m.

Hearing Continued

Preliminary hearing on charges of embezzlement against Charles W. Embrey, 31, of Rockville, a cashier for the Montgomery County Liquor Control Board, was continued yesterday in Silver Spring Police Court.

The action was taken on advice of State's Attorney Walter W. Dawson, who said the defendant, who has been released under $5000 bond, had promised to waive preliminary hearing.

Embrey was charged upon discovery of approximately $10,000 missing from county liquor funds since July, 1947.

17 Employes Honored

Seventeen employes of the Washington office of Remington Rand, Inc., yesterday were made charter members of the company's newly organized Twenty-Five Year Club.

At a ceremony in the firm's building, 1615 L st. nw., the charter members received wrist watches and an additional week's vacation with pay annually.

They are Phillip C. Anth, David H. Barron, George Z. Bledsoe, William H. M. Stover, Martin H. Schilling, John M. Bell, Charles I. Fairall, James I. Meadows, Joseph F. Tracy, Herbert H. Goodman, Samuel P. Holland, George T. Knoll, Elon A. Fielder, Wilmer L. Colwell, Nola Wilder and Louis S. Torok.

Traffic Light 'Blackout'

Traffic lights blinked out for about 10 minutes yesterday on Maryland ave. ne., between 4th and 14th sts. ne., and on several parts of F st. nw. and Constitution ave. nw.

Potomac Electric Power Co. officials said the "blackout," which occurred at about 3 p. m., probably was the result of trouble in a cable connecting control panels of the District power line in the Municipal Building.

Pepco repairmen were attempting to locate the source of the trouble when the lights resumed of their own accord.

Antifire Posters Out

More than 2000 posters headlined "Santa Claus Desires—No Xmas Fires" will provide the backbone of a campaign to make the public wary of fire hazards during the Christmas season.

Sponsored by the newly organized Fire Prevention Council of the District, the posters have been sent to local businessmen as display reminders for the customers, Henry J. Miller, chairman of the council, said.

Also part of the "Keep Christmas Cheerful—Not Tearful" campaign is a "Flaming Facts" sheet to emphasize fire precautions.

Special Assembly Urged

Bristol, Va., Dec. 7 (AP).—School patrons here have sent Governor Tuck a request to take "prompt steps" to call a special session of the General Assembly for the purpose of making funds available for a school construction program, by any means "he may deem necessary."

Citizen Group Leaders Favor Fund Program

Presidents of member groups of the Federation of Citizens Associations last night supported plans for an entertainment program to raise funds and "stimulate civic spirit" in Washington.

The association president, meeting with federation officers at the District Building, also agreed to urge their respective organizations to make housing available to visitors here during the inaugural celebration.

No specific details of the fund-raising program to be sponsored by the federation were laid. Clifford H. Newell, chairman of a special ways and means committee, said he would report to the federation that about 30 association presidents are "in favor of the general idea."

Suggestions included a Potomac River boat ride, a social or sports event at Griffith Stadium, a city-wide picnic for members and guests, and a bazaar at which prizes would be awarded in contests.

Mrs. George Beishlag, of the Inaugural Committee's Housing and Hospitality Committee, asked that each citizens' association appoint similar groups within its organization to locate housing accommodations for inaugural guests.

Judge Offers Aid To Jilted Swain In Finding Girl

Baltimore, Dec. 7 (AP).—Carl Hagerman (see last line) told a judge today he went to pieces when his girl told him she loved another man and was going to be married.

He was before Magistrate Herbert F. Franklin on a drunk and disorderly charge.

The magistrate telephoned the manager of a sugar refinery and persuaded him to give Hagerman another chance on his old job.

Then the magistrate told Hagerman:

"There are about five women to every man. If you want me to I'll introduce you to some girls who would be glad to have such a kind-hearted boy friend."

Hagerman is 69.

'Bert' Hall Of Lafayette Escadrille Dies

Fremont, Ohio, Dec. 7 (AP).—Weston B. (Bert) Hall, 62, soldier of fortune and one of the founders of the famed Lafayette Escadrille of World War I, died yesterday.

Hall

Hall, head of a Castalia, Ohio, toy factory, was found dead in his automobile. Coroner F. A. Visconti said Hall was stricken with a heart attack. His car plunged through a fence and against a utility pole.

The Missouri-born adventurer learned to fly in France around 1909. Three years later he took part in the Balkan War, becoming the first man to fly an airplane on a mission during a war, friends said.

In 1914 Hall, master of several languages, joined the French Foreign Legion.

When World War I broke out Hall and five other men formed the Lafayette Escadrille.

During the war Hall went into Russia incognito to try to determine how much assistance the country was giving the Allies. When his mission was completed he flew with the Russians and after the Revolution reportedly helped fly some of the crown jewels out of the country.

During the early 20's Hall went to China, where he became head of the Chinese air forces under the name of General Chang. He held this post for more than a decade before returning to the United States.

'Experts Should Be On Tap, Not On Top'

Atom Chief Favors People's Control

By Sonia Stein

PREDICTING yesterday that we are entering on a very fruitful period during which control of atomic energy will be "one of the greatest tests of self-government in our experience," David E. Lilienthal stressed the importance of informed public opinion on atomic energy.

The chairman of the Atomic Energy Committee, speaking to the Women's National Press Club at the Mayflower, said that the wishes of the people as a whole are the proper guide in decisions on atomic energy policy, and that "the place for the expert is on tap, not on top."

Reminding his audience that besides being the seventh anniversary of Pearl Harbor yesterday was only a few days past the sixth anniversary of the first successful self-sustaining and controlled chain reaction of atomic energy, Lilienthal discussed the extremes in attitude about the subject. Because its first application was as a weapon—and quite a weapon—some people became "fascinated with catastrophe and a cult of doom arose. Now," he said, "the pendulum has swung and other experts regard atomic energy as 'just another bomb' or 'just a piece of ordnance.'"

Both Opinions 'Extreme'

LILIENTHAL, who regards both of these opinions as extreme and inaccurate, claims "it is a misconception to see a weapon and a great body of knowledge as synonymous."

"I wouldn't want to waste my time on the commission," he said, "if the importance of atomic energy were only military."

He pointed out that in addition to its direct effects on agriculture, nutrition, industry, international relations, education and medicine, research in the field stimulates knowledge in these fields even when not directly related to atomic energy.

Lilienthal estimates that within three years there will be an experimental plant producing electricity from atomic energy and that within 20 years a sizable proportion of it will be so produced.

In reply to a query on the possibility of there not being enough uranium to go around, Lilienthal pointed out that "there hasn't been any honest to goodness exploration" in the past for a material which was formerly used most effectively "to produce orange glaze on vases."

Results of experimental work being done in private industry on atomic energy is reported to the commission which in turn reports it to Congress, Lilienthal said in reply to another question. "Then it will be up to Congress to see that it is available to all."

Explaining that Schenectady officials of the United Electrical Workers had refused to discuss some information which the commission thought reflected on their reliability, Lilienthal said that the commission had no choice but to bar UEW members from work on secret projects at General Electric, although it believes that organized labor should have a share in atomic energy work.

Control Chance 'Slim'

REGARDING chances of international energy control as very slim, Lilienthal said that with such great benefits to be derived from atomic energy, the Russian scientists were undoubtedly working on it.

Admitting that efforts to maintain security sometimes made the commission itself responsible for difficulties in reporting on the subject, Lilienthal suggested to the newspaperwomen that the reporters' "patriotic impulse not to bear down" has had something to do with it, too. Newspapers will have more science writers—or writers who understand the implications of science—on their staffs in the future, predicted Lilienthal.

Guests at the luncheon included Mrs. Lilanthal, Miss Margaret Bondfield, former British labor leader who was the club's first speaker on November 13, 1919; the club's first president, Mrs. Lily Lykes Shepard; Marriner S. Eccles of the Federal Reserve, and George Morris Fay, district attorney for the District of Columbia.

Also present were the following members of the Atomic Energy Committee: William H. Maher, Lewis L. Strauss, John Gustafson, Joseph Volpe and Jesse Johnson.

Mme. Chiang Invited for Tea

First Family to Spend Christmas in Missouri

By Elizabeth Maguire

President Truman and his family plan to enjoy an old-fashioned Christmas at home in Independence, Mo., it was disclosed at Mrs. Truman's press conference yesterday.

The First Lady and her mother, Mrs. D. W. Wallace, probably accompanied by Miss Truman, will leave ahead of the President, to be joined by him at a later, unannounced date.

The President and Mrs. Truman will have as their guests at tea on Friday at 5 Mme. Chiang Kai-shek and Mrs. George C. Marshall, wife of the Secretary of State. The wife of China's generalissimo is not expected to attend the Chinese Bazaar today at the Mayflower Hotel, but it was announced yesterday at Mrs. Truman's press conference that the First Lady will attend.

No, She's Not Engaged

In answer to a question which she calls the "hardy perennial," Mrs. James Helm, Mrs. Truman's social secretary, stated that there is absolutely no truth to the rumor that Margaret is engaged. She also denied rumors that Margaret plans a concert tour of Europe.

Miss Truman has as a house guest Miss Jeanne Rogers of Kansas City. Yesterday Miss Rogers accompanied Mrs. Truman and Margaret to the luncheon given by the American Newspaper Women's Club at the Statler Hotel.

Later in the afternoon the First Lady received Senora de Roman, wife of the President of Nicaragua; Senora de Sevilla Sacasa, wife of the Nicaraguan Ambassador, and Senora Dora de Sevilla Sacasa, wife of the Acting Minister of Foreign Affairs of Nicaragua.

Inaugural Plans

Plans for the inaugural reception are being completed. The reception will be at the National Gallery of Art on Thursday afternoon, January 20, at 5 o'clock. Guests who will be received first by the President and Mrs. Truman on that occasion include Governors of States, electors, the Supreme Court and the Cabinet and their wives.

Others who will attend the reception are members of the Democratic National Committee, the Joint Congressional Committee, the Inaugural Committee, heads of independent agencies, the Little Cabinet, District Commissioners, State chairmen and vice chairmen, State committeemen and committeewomen, officials of the Truman-Barkley Clubs, officials of the Young Democratic Clubs, family and friends of the President and Mrs. Truman and family and friends of the Vice President-elect.

Echegarays Entertain At Cocktail Party

THE Agricultural Attache of the Spanish Embassy and Senora de Echegaray entertained at a small cocktail party yesterday afternoon at their new home on Hawthorne st.

President Pays Surprise Visit At Ladies' Tea

President Truman put in one of his rare appearances at an all-femme tea yesterday afternoon honoring Mrs. India Moffett Edwards, director of the Women's Division Democratic National Committee at the Carlton Hotel.

Appearing jovial and healthy, the Chief Executive slipped in a side door and delivered an informal toast to Mrs. Edwards and "all the women who had helped make victory possible."

The First Lady and the premier daughter of the land preceded the President's arrival. After mingling informally with the several hundred Democratic faithful, Mrs. Truman and Margaret broke away from the crowds that had surrounded them for the better part of an hour and returned to Blair House.

Those attending included Mrs. Walter Maloney and Mrs. Floyd D. Cook, who manned the Truman-Barkley headquarters at the Mayflower Hotel; Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, president of the Woman's National Democratic Club, and Mrs. William H. Davis, former president of the WNDC; as well as Mrs. Charles Brannan, wife of the Secretary of Agriculture, one of the most ardent speech-makers and believers in the Truman-Barkley ticket.

Others glimpsed here and there included Mrs. Joseph Casey, wife of the former Massachusetts Representative; Mrs. John L. Whitehurst, past president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs; Mrs. Tom Clark, wife of the Attorney General; Mrs. Clifford Davis, president of the Congressional Club and wife of the Tennessee Representative; Mrs. Ellen Woodward, Mrs. Leslie Biffle, who also had attended the American Newspaper Women's Club luncheon; Mrs. Lamar Caudle, wife of the Assistant Attorney General; and Mrs. James Webb, wife of the Director of the Budget.

Holding a court all her own was Mrs. Frieda Hennock, first and only woman member of the Federal Communications Commission. Arriving late but immediately the cynosure of all eyes was Senator-elect Margaret Chase Smith, (R.) of Maine.

Only member of the diplomatic corps noted was chic Mme. Bonnet, wife of the French Ambassador.

Unaccustomed As I Am . . .

Mrs. Truman Addresses News Women

By Genevieve Reynolds

PROTOCOL was junked temporarily and the First Lady broke her long White House silence by "miking" an informal greeting to some 300 petticoat scribes, diplomatic and official spouses. Occasion was the American Newspaper Women's Club celebrity-studded luncheon honoring the First Lady and the organization's associate members yesterday at the Statler Hotel.

"I am somewhat embarrassed," remarked Mrs. Truman, adding "more than somewhat," in reply to a laudatory presentation to the audience.

Heretofore the First Lady had acknowledged introductions by merely standing and bowing. It's the first time, to this reporter's knowledge, that she has spoken over a microphone at any public gathering.

Because of so much rank present, the club dispensed with the headache of protocol seating, and guests drew flowers at the door to match table blossoms inside the Congressional Room. Hence a Cabinet wife or an ambassadress was likely to find herself at a back or middle table.

Introductory Jingles

Mrs. Truman wore a two-piece, black wool suit and an off-white sailor with a perky black plume. Chic in a pastel blue wool suit was Margaret Truman, who was one of several to introduce the associate members with "guess who" jingles. Others presenting the rhymes included Vice President Lee Walsh; Helene Williams, Mrs. William Randolph Hearst, jr., Mrs. Ruth Crane, secretary; Mrs. Margaret Hart Canby, immediate past president of the organization, who also presented a copy of Pat McGerr's new detective story, "Catch Me If You Can," to Mrs. Truman. Mrs. Canby revealed that the First Lady is a whodunit fan. The author is an active member of the ANWC.

Grace McGerr, club president, presented Mrs. Truman, and Mrs. Cordell Hull, wife of the former Secretary of State and longtime associate member. Also seated at the table with the First Lady in addition to Mrs. Hull and Miss McGerr were Mrs. Max Truitt, daughter of Vice President-Elect Barkley, Mrs. Kate Scott Brooks, founder and life member of the club, and Mrs. Canby.

Among the diplomatic guests present were Mme. Bonnet, wife of the French Ambassador; Senora de Dillon, wife of the Ecuadorean Ambassador; Mme. Ala, wife of the Iranian Ambassador; and Mme. Dendramis, wife of the Greek Ambassador;

Others Attending

ASSOCIATE members present included Mrs. Tom Clark, wife of the Attorney General; Mrs. Kenneth Royall, wife of the Secretary of the Army; Mrs. Clinton Anderson, wife of the New Mexico Senator and former Secretary of Agriculture; Mrs William H. Clements, Mrs. Clark Clifford, Mrs. Tom Connally, Mrs. William M. Culbertson, Mrs. Joseph R. Farrington, Mrs. Robert E. Freer, Mrs. Edward Everett Gann, Miss Marguerite Griffin, Mrs. Amos Fries, Mrs. Homer Ferguson, wife of the Michigan Senator; Mrs. Clarence Norton Goodwin, Mrs. Douglas Hatch, Mrs. Stanley K. Hornbech, wife of the former U. S. Ambassador to the Netherlands; Mrs. Robert Whitney Imbrie, Mrs. Thad Brown, Mrs. Julian E. Gillespie, Mrs. R. M. Kauffmann, Mrs. Oliver C. Kuhn, Mrs. Robert A. Lovett.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Girl Wonders If She's Justified in Jilting Sweetheart Who Refuses to Return From City Where He Went Ostensibly to Seek Prosperity

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a girl 19 years old, writing from Puerto Rico, my homeland, to ask your help with a difficult problem I have met. I have followed your writings in our newspaper, El Mundo, and have developed confidence in your judgment.

I am employed in an office and study at night to complete my education. I am now in the fourth year of high school and Stephen, my sweetheart, held a good position in the same office, while studying at the university, until last July.

Then he decided to go to New York to find a better job at larger salary, to save money for our wedding. Since being in New York he has changed jobs five times and for this reason I begged him to come home, saying that I would break our engagement if he did not.

Hopes Firm Stand May Conquer Him

ALSO his family has urged him to come home, but he has decided to stay where he is, and therefore I did break our engagement. Only yesterday I returned to him all his letters and pictures. It is my hope that on receiving these, he will return to me immediately, as I feel he will do if he really loves me.

I wish to make clear that he is my first love; that I was very happy in his company, that we never quarreled or had any serious disputes, and that since he went to New York I haven't gone to any recreational events. Have I done right in taking a firm stand? And do you think I love him truly? Please advise me. E. B.

True Love Cannot Exist in Vacuum

DEAR E. B.: Much poignant poetry and classic fiction to the contrary, true love cannot exist, one-sided, in a vacuum. True love is a dynamic (i.e., active and growing) relationship of mutual consideration within a framework of steady close companionship.

Romantic fever, which is something else again, is rather akin to frustrated passion. In such case the palpitant emotion has to do with fantasy-glorification of a person whose "every day" self is still somewhat a mystery to the "lover"; or who, due to circumstances, seems unattainable.

Through past ages, this type of situation or chest-heaving agitation has been much celebrated in music, song and story as being love of celestial caliber; and yet a more ignorant, neurotic or mistaken concept of "true love" is hardly conceivable. Actually what the tormented devotee is proclaiming is psychological maladjustment to reality, and baffled hunger for love-relatedness that he knows not how to engage and perpetuate in serviceable terms.

Man's in Flight From Cooperation

WARM CONGENIALITY, or a spark of affinity, felt in first meetings or in tentative courtship thereafter, may lead to true love; but only if (1) the pair mutually desire, sincerely and spontaneously, to establish positive unity in dealing with life, and (2) use their intelligence and appreciation of each other to guide them in developing corresponding social patterns that make this possible.

Unless this course is happily pursued, with sense of collective gain rather than personal hardship, the potential of love existing between them has no vital significance. It is no better than the "flash in the pan" of transitory infatuation.

Therefore, evaluating your problem, I think (1) that you have the capacity to love Stephen, but (2) that his present course of action amounts, unconsciously or deliberately, to rejecting your devotion; and (3) that you've shown intuitive wisdom and profitable foresight in breaking the engagement.

Your capacity to love, plus your desire to love realistically, is your guarantee of finding true love eventually; so don't feel defeated by Stephen's defection, and instead of waiting to hear from him, do your best to get back into social circulation immediately. M. H.

Keep in Trim

Plenty of the Right Foods Helps Both Curves and Nerves

By Ida Jean Kain

The trouble with most thin girls is that they think they eat enough . . . after all, they eat all they want.

How about it, girls? Aren't your meals pretty much hit and miss? Until the daily meals furnish the calories you need to go on—and some of you go fast and furiously—plus good nutrition and calories to spare for curves, you haven't a ghost of a chance of picking up pounds.

As your dietitian, I'm particularly concerned with what you have for breakfast, and for lunch. Acquire the habit of taking one third the day's food needs at breakfast. Don't settle for toast and coffee! Tomorrow morning have oranges or grapefruit or the juice. And eat a hot whole-grain cereal . . . start with a small serving, even if it's only a couple of tablespoonfuls. If cream is available, fine . . . if not, use whole milk. Add a few raisins or dates to the cereal . . . mmm, good. Have a slice of whole-grain bread toasted and well buttered. By the next week's end you'll relish two slices of toast for breakfast. Don't take black coffee . . . add cream. On alternate mornings have an egg in place of the cereal.

For the next three weeks, don't buy so much as a lipstick on your lunch hour. Eat leisurely and relax afterward, instead of dashing about. Have anything you wish for lunch—the main course, plus a roll with butter and a glass of milk. The dessert might be fruit with cream.

For a pickup in the afternoon, have another glass of milk. It's not just more calories that are needed, but better calories. There wouldn't be much advantage in simply piling on fat—go after good muscle tissue and sustained vitality. Protein builds muscle tissue and takes care of wear and tear . . . have a quart of whole milk a day, an egg and a serving of lean meat.

Have a dark green leafy vegetable every day . . . even a few tablespoonfuls, and have liver once or twice a week. Enough iron can take that chip off your shoulder, and then with adequate calcium to act as a buffer to the nervous system, you'll have a really sunny disposition.

If your appetite is pale and picky, give it a boost with thiamin—that's Vitamin B-1. It comes in whole grains and liver and wheat germ, or in concentrated capsules. A thiamin tablet before meals will sharpen your appetite. Ask the doctor. To encourage appetite, eat meals on time, and take an extra slice of bread and butter. That's one of the cheapest ways to increase calories.

And relax. Hurry is largely habit. When you have to put on speed, do it without stewing inside. There's a calm art to rushing slowly!

About Quality Of Graded Eggs

When the prices of eggs are as high as they are now, I want to know the difference between Grade A and Grade B eggs, as the price of the latter is several cents cheaper per dozen. I will, therefore, appreciate your comment on the subject.

ANOTHER READER.

The grade of an egg refers to its quality as determined by candling. To quote from the regulations issued by the United States Department of Agriculture (effective on December 1, 1946), the specifications for Grade A eggs are, "The shell must be clean, unbroken and practically normal. The air cell must not exceed 2/8 inch in depth and must be practically regular. The white must be clear and at least reasonably firm so that the yolk appears at least fairly well centered and its outline only fairly well defined when the egg is twirled before the candling light. The yolk must be practically free from apparent defects.

The specifications for Grade B eggs are, "The shell must be clean, unbroken and may be slightly abnormal. The air cell must not exceed 3/8 inch. The white must be clear but may be slightly weak so that the yolk may appear off center with its outline well defined when the egg is twirled before the candling light. The yolk may appear slightly enlarged and slightly flattened and may show other definite but not serious defects."

Within each grade, eggs are reclassed as to size of weight. You will find these weight classes marked on each carton in addition to the grade of the eggs. Eggs marked "Jumbo" must weigh a minimum of 30 ounces per dozen, "Extra Large," 27 ounces per dozen; "Large," 24 ounces per dozen; "Medium," 21 ounces per dozen; and "Small," 18 ounces per dozen.

When eggs marked Grade A are sold at varying prices, the only difference is in size, not quality. The difference between the grades of eggs is a difference in actual quality of the egg. To save money, the smaller Grade A eggs can be substituted for the larger more expensive Grade A's when serving them as fried, boiled, etc. The Grade B eggs can be used satisfactorily for combining with other flavors in preparing many dishes.

I am planning to have a baby shower for my sister who is expecting around the end of the year. Will you tell me whether the shower should be given before or after the birth of the baby; the appropriate day and hour, what is usually done at the shower, and what is nice to serve? E. N. B.

It is correct to give the shower either before or after the birth of the baby. The hour and day you choose should be one which is most convenient to you and your guest of honor. You could choose afternoon hours, inviting the guests for luncheon or dessert. Or, they could be invited for the later afternoon and have refreshments take the form of tea with sandwiches and cakes.

If some of the guests you wish to invite have daytime duties which prevent attendance at social functions, your party could be an evening affair. You could invite them to come at 7:30 or 8 for dessert or serve the refreshments later in the evening.

For entertainment, you could play a game such as bridge which is enjoyed by your guests. Or, if you didn't wish to do that, perhaps the guests could spend the evening making a covering for a crib quilt for the baby. To do this, the hostess provides white unbleached muslin blocks 3 or 4 inches square and asks each guest to write her own name in the center of the block. The guest then is given pink or blue embroidery thread to outline the name in embroidery stitchery. When each white block is embroidered, the quilt is sewed together with a pink or blue block between each white one.

Would you tell me how to make breaded veal cutlets so that the meat is well done and the crust is really crisp? R. G. S.

Pat the cutlets with a paper towel to remove all excess moisture. (This helps to keep the crust from becoming separated from the cutlet when it cooks.) Roll them in dry crumbs, dip in beaten egg and roll again in dry crumbs. Place in piping hot fat to brown on both sides. When browned, cover the pan and turn the heat low to steam cook for 30 minutes. Turn them frequently. At the end of 30 minutes remove the pan cover, and turn up the heat to evaporate excess moisture and crisp the crust, turning frequently.

Hooks to be used in pantry, kitchen or bathroom should be dipped in enamel paint before they are put up. Then if the articles hung on them are damp, the hooks will not rust them.

Diplomatic Set To Sell Jades, Silks at Bazaar

Wives of diplomats and top officials will busy themselves today selling rare articles and fancy foods at the Chinese bazaar which is being held between the hours of 11 a. m. and 8 p. m. in the Chinese Room of the Mayflower Hotel.

Jades and silks and Eastern spices will tempt the holiday shopper. Countess Maryla will have a table of her own perfumes, and she will present a bottle of "Day and Night" to Mme. Koo.

Although it is doubtful there'll be many articles left after the bazaar today, all that can be salvaged will be placed in a follow-up sale, to be held Friday, from 11 to 6, at Christ Church Parish House, 31st and O sts, Georgetown. Members of St. Stephen's Guild, who had such a successful bazaar a few weeks ago, will take part in the follow-up sale, acting as hostesses.

Proud BPW Members Celebrate Anniversary of Founding Here

Here in the Washington area there are some 800 women's organizations—all clamoring to have their good deeds recognized. One of the most justifiably proud of the group is the D. C. Business and Professional Women's Club, which celebrated its twenty-first birthday anniversary last night with an organizational meeting in the west ballroom of the Shoreham Hotel.

During 1940-'41 the local BPW became the largest in the federation with a boasted membership of 964 members. Last night members portrayed its history in a skit with 15 of the living presidents participating. Among wartime accomplishments depicted were the club's citation from the Treasury Department for its record of war bond purchases and sales. Also it received from the Surgeons General of the Army and Navy, special recognition for its reconditioning and rehabilitation program.

Dr. K. Frances Scott, national president, who came down especially for the occasion, cautioned club members to keep active and not decline into old women with no interests. "As long as a woman keeps actively interested in life, she will preserve her youth. Give up and resort to the rocking chair, and she becomes old," admonished youthful-looking Dr. Scott. The national BPW head advocated full participation in citizenship activities for all women.

Miss Genevieve Rogers presided at the local group's twenty-first birthday anniversary celebration. Mrs. Ursula Danforth, vice chairman, Research Committee, served as mistress of ceremonies. Mrs. Lucy Johnston Rumley narrated the club's history.

Among the national BPW presidents who turned out for the occasion were Dr. Charl Ormond Williams, nationally-known educator; Miss Earlene White, postmistress at the Senate.

Among the local past presidents participating in the historical pageant were Mrs. Thelma Davenport. Dr. Irma Gene Nevins (Mrs. Hubert Holloway). Miss Marguerite Rawalt, Miss Marjorie Webster, Miss Elizabeth L. Mann.

Today Dr. Scott will be honored at a reception given by the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Club, 4 to 6 p. m. at the Statler Hotel.

Hard Words That Are Easy to Eat

Javanese Rijstafel Recipe Adds to Tongue-Twisting Dishes That Curry Flavor

By Mary Van Rensselaer Thayer

RECENTLY this department's wilted taste buds were delightfully titillated and, unfortunately, revived to gustatory enthusiasm at a Javanese rijstafel. The eating was done chez Baron John Melville, a major with the Netherlands Mission. The Javanese dishes were created by Raden Ajeng Soepianti Soejono (Raden Ajeng in Javanese means Wellborn Single), a svelte, chic and exceedingly smart young lady who works at the Dutch Embassy. Since Loesje (what the chefess is actually called) adapted her native recipes to products easily obtainable here and since they are fairly economical, we're passing them on. Incidentally, Loesje had the recipes typed and bound in a brown and navy blue batik cover—the batik background is derived from a spice flower and, in Java, at the wedding of the eldest daughter, parents give guests sarongs of similar (Kembang tjengheh) design.

AJAM BESENGEK (Javanese Curry)

2 onions—ground
2 cloves garlic—ground
2 teaspoons crushed red peppers
½ teaspoon cayenne pepper
1 teaspoon tumeric—ground
2 teaspoons coriander—ground
1 teaspoon cumin—ground
5 cloves
2 bay leaves
Rind of 1 lemon
4 cups milk
Salt, sugar to taste
1 medium sized chicken cut in serving pieces

Saute everything with chicken until onions are tender in 1½ cups of shortening. Add milk and cover. Cook on medium heat until chicken is tender and cooked dry. This recipe works for lamb beef—any kind of meat.

SAMBAL GORENG (a basic sauce)

2 cloves garlic
2 teaspoons crushed red peppers
1 cup milk
Salt, sugar to taste

Saute onions, spices, add milk and cook 10 minutes. In this sauce you may put sliced string beans, shrimps, chicken livers, hard cooked eggs, sliced olives, sliced tomatoes, etc.

RENDANG

1 pound cubed beef liver
½ teaspoon tumeric
3 drops citronella oil
Rind of 1 lemon
2 garlic cloves
2 teaspoonfuls crushed red peppers
3 cups milk
Salt, sugar to taste

SATE MANIS (Manis means sweet in Javanese)

1 pound beef, pork or lamb cubed
½ cup soy sauce
1 cup sugar
1 teaspoonful coriander, ground
Juice of 1 lemon
Water, butter

Make a sauce of the soy sauce, sugar, coriander, lemon juice, water and butter. Marinate the meat for at least 2 hours. Put meat on skewers, and broil. Baste with the marinade. Note: It's better to sweeten soy sauce with molasses rather than sugar.

AJAM OPOR

2 onions
2 garlic cloves
½ teaspoonful nutmeg
2 bay leaves
3 cups milk (substitutes for cocoanut juice)
1 cup cream
Salt, pepper, sugar to taste
1 medium sized chicken cut in serving pieces

Saute everything with the chicken in 1½ cups of shortening on medium heat until onions are soft. Add milk and cover. Cook on low heat until chicken is done. Before serving pour over the cream after the heat has been turned off. Serve with paper thin strips of red pepper on top.

And here's how the Javanese cook the flaky rice which accompanies every dish. Always use the long grain white kind. Wash the rice at least 7 times, until most of the starch is gone. Keep boiling water ready, put rice in deep pan, pour boiling water over it until it stands about 2 inches higher than rice level. Let it boil on very brisk fire until the grains have extended and water is gone. Then cover and turn heat to low. The rice should be done in about 15 minutes.

There!

Around the Wassail

RHODA LOW, who is exhibiting her latest drawings, water colors, ink wash studies, at the Women's National Democratic Club this afternoon will elegantly lubricate those attending with a wassail bowl. Half the proceeds of pictures sold will go to the Thrift Shop—but the wassail is for free.

Rhoda, who mixes paintings with the more expansive nuances of good living, collects exotic food recipes as a side line. She has tucked some 1500 into a file but her favorite of all is "Catherine's Fishballs." Catherine was the Low family cook and her fishballs, in miniature, will be served as Wassail Bowl accompaniment.

The ingredients are simple enough.

½ pound salt codfish
An equal amount of potatoes plus 1 tablespoon
Butter the size of a walnut
2 eggs
Cream
3 pounds of lard or vegetable shortening

Important, though, is to use codfish in pieces, not grated.

The codfish must be soaked over night, drained in the morning. Cut up the potatoes. Put both into boil. When potatoes are cooked, drain thoroughly, add butter and eggs quickly while still hot. Beat until very light. Beating is the most important feature in lightness. Then let the mixture cool a little, add enough cream to make it soft. (When potatoes are starchy add more cream than when they are watery). The eggs will hold the mixture together. Then have kettle with very hot fat ready; drop in mixture in either large or small balls. Either use a French frying basket or drain the fishballs on brown paper. Having the fat extremely hot makes the fishballs whiskery, deliciously crackly.

As partner to fishballs fried salt pork strips should be served. Simply take strips of salt pork, put them in hot but not boiling water, take them out almost immediately and dredge through flour. This tends to flatten pork and absorb surplus grease. Then fry them crisp.

Mme. Nehru Tells NSAL of India

Among the guests were Mrs. William Preston Lane, jr., and Miss Dorothy Lane, wife and daughter of the Governor of Maryland.

The program was under the direction of Mrs. W. Ridgley Chapline and Mrs. William Waller Edwards.

Roast a Duckling For Holiday Fete Or Family Dinner

FINE FARE for a holiday party or a family dinner is roast duckling. This one is stuffed with an apricot-rice dressing and garnished with orange slaces, cranberry relish and parsley. Here are a few suggestions for roasting the duck and making the dressing:

A duckling is prepared for roasting in the same way as a chicken. After stuffing, it should be placed breast side up on a rack in an open pan. A piece of cheese cloth or thin, coarse muslin dipped in melted fat and placed over the bird will permit it to brown evenly and delicately. The duckling should be roasted in an open pan, without a cover and without water.

With a drawn weight of 3¾ to 4½ pounds, a duckling will roast in approximately 2 to 2½ hours. It will be done when the drumstick can be moved up and down easily, or when the meat of the thickest part of the drumstick feels soft when pressed between the fingers.

APRICOT RICE STUFFING

2 tablespoons butter or margarine
¼ cup chopped celery
¼ cup chopped onion
¼ cup mushrooms
¾ cup rice
1 teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon poultry seasoning boiling water
1 cup sliced dried apricots (1-3 pound)

Melt butter in heavy skillet. Brown celery, onion, and mushrooms in butter. Add rice. Brown until rice is a deep golden color. Add salt and poultry seasoning. Add water until it is ½ inch above the rice. Cover and bring to a boil. Reduce heat and steam 10 minutes. Remove from heat. Add apricots and mix.

Paper Napkins

Paper napkins are handy articles to many of us cooks. We like to drain the bacon on them in the morning; we like to wipe out the fishy pan with some of them before we put it into scalding water for washing, and we put them around the blades of our sharp kitchen knives so they do not contact other utensils in the drawer.

The Family Scrapbook

By Dr. Ernest G. Osborne

Willingly to Bed

Bedtime is troublesome in many a home. Younger children and older, too, are reluctant or defiant even, when bedtime comes and they are expected to leave even though something very interesting may be going on. Yet we know that growing children need plenty of sleep. What to do?

Experience shows that certain things are important. First of all, an understanding should be developed that there is a regular bedtime. If the matter becomes one for debate each night, one can only expect youngsters to try to marshal all the arguments for postponing the bedward trek. Then, too, there should be a reminder given a few minutes before bedtime arrives. It is hard fard children to give up interesting activity suddenly but if they can begin to taper off, it isn't so bad. A third practical idea is that of arranging a relatively quiet kind of activity for the prebedtime hour. Telling or reading stories, going for a short walk or some other not-too-exciting thing is usually better peparation than hilarious play

One on the Aisle—

Cocteau Tristan Drives a Jalopy

By Richard L. Coe

JEAN COCTEAU, whose "Beauty and the Beast" proved such a delight at the Little some months ago, has created a fascinating film from the Tristan and Isolde legend, "The Eternal Return." The Dupont's new arrival will delight those who welcome films that are out of the ordinary.

Cocteau again exhibits that uncanny ability, so skillfully achieved in the first picture, of combining the romantic with realism. He has taken the story which Wagner immortalized and set it in a France that is not quite the present. His Tristan, now called Patrick, rattles around in an early flivver; his Isolde, now Nathalie, inhabits a castle blessed with plumbing. And for the fate which stirs through Wagner's music he has substituted an evil dwarf who serves to make the real unreal, the unreal real.

The story concerns a lonely, widowed bachelor, Mark, whose nephew sets out to find a bride for his uncle. He meets the girl in a barroom brawl, decides she is the wife his older relative needs and brings her back to the lonely chateau Mark shares with three other avaricious relatives—a bitter, conniving sister, her foolish husband and their offspring, the evil dwarf.

Naturally, the two young people discover they love each other, but not until the dwarf has mixed the magic love potion into their drinks. The classic ending of the opera story arrives, alternating between the outlines of the legend and touches Cocteau invents.

"THE ETERNAL RETURN," a screen play by Jean Cocteau, directed by Jean Delannoy, produced by Andre Paulve, released through Discina International at the Dupont.

THE CAST

Patrick	Jean Marais
Nathalie	Madeleine Sologne
Gertrude	Yvonne DeBray
Marc	Jean Murat
Nathalie the 2d	Junie Astor
Lionel	Roland Toutain
Achille	Pieral
Anne	Jeanne Marken
Amedee	Jean d'Yd
Le Moroit	Alexandre Rignault

Jean Marais Splendid

The cast is absolutely first rate, the two leads being played by Jean Marais, who was so fine as "The Beast," and Madeleine Sologne. Both are blond, Nordic types and their scenes together ring with emotional and physical vibrance. Pieral is splendid as the hateful little Achille and Jean Murat is exactly right as the likable uncle on whom fate plays its cruel trick.

About his idea for the film, Cocteau has said: "There exist very few great love stories, triumphs of a pair of lovers. Tristan is the archetype. I wanted to set the legend, one illustrious among all, to the rhythm of our epoch and to prove that Nietzche's phrase, 'the eternal return,' could be translated by the eternal return down through the centuries of coincidences, surprises, obstacles and dreams, provoking an intrigue which other persons relive without being aware of it."

This he achieves by using film in a highly individual manner. Both his pictures are as close an approach to celluloid poetry as the screen has achieved. It is an engrossing melange of myth and reality, a tender and violent web spun by a master of celluloid.

THE CHILDREN'S THEATER of Washington production of "Alice in Wonderland" disappointed a lot of youngsters Saturday afternoon, not through any fault of Alice, but simply because the Roosevelt Auditorium is only so big; a matinee sellout meant that a good many youthful tears were shed by those who'd arrived at the school without tickets . . . To avoid just such salty tragedies, it's urged that older children and adults plan for the Friday night performance this week . . . Already the Saturday matinee seats are going rapidly at the Snow Agency, 1108 G st.

NEW YEAR'S EVE seats for "The Red Shoes" are already on sale at the National, where the British film now is set to continue through January 1 . . . Yes, that New Year's Eve show means just that — midnight . . . "Dear Ruth," the Norman Krasna comedy, is being repeated tonight at the Clendenen Gym by the American University Theater . . . The Masquers of Roosevelt Center are playing "Village Green" tonight at 8:30 in Roosevelt Auditorium, 13th and Upshur.

HORTON FOOTE'S play, "Goodbye to Richmond," will share the bill with Valerie Bettis and her company in "As I Lay Dying," a dance play based on the William Faulkner novel, Sunday night at 8:45 in the Baltimore Museum of Art . . . This double bill, starring the dancer of "Inside U. S. A.," is being presented in the Monument City by Productions, Inc., which was unable to secure a suitable local stage for the event. However, tickets for the evening may be reserved at PI's office here, HUdson 9288.

EMILY KIMBROUGH, that resourceful lady who's turned her every adventure into book material and will be one of the speakers at tomorrow's Book and Author luncheon at the Statler, will be pleased to know that her youthful self will be on a local stage the same evening . . . Emily and Cornelia Otis Skinner are the leading characters in the Kerrs' play, "Our Hearts Were Young and Gay," which opens a three-night run tonight by the students of St. Cecelia's Academy.

AN EVIL FATE—Pieral, as the dwarf Achille, who plays an important role in Jean Cocteau's imaginative retelling of the Tristan legend in "The Eternal Return," opening today on the Dupont screen

Covenant Case Studied

Annapolis, Md., Dec. 7 (AP).—To hold that courts can not enforce restrictive convenants against Negroes would result in "the greatest public confusion and civil disorder," the Court of Appeals was told today.

Maryland's highest court took under advisement arguments in two cases involving the right of Negroes to buy property in white neighborhoods.

They involved Beachwood Forest, a 100-acre development along the Magothy River between Annapolis and Baltimore. Deeds to the property in 1922 contained a clause banning sale to anyone "of Negro, Chinese or Japanese descent."

The Rev. Hiram E. Smith, who said he is an Indian, and his wife, Lulu, a Negro, bought about 65 acres in 1943 from a man who left the restrictive covenant out of the deed. In 1946, the Smiths bought four adjacent lots which also were covered by restricted covenants. Mr. and Mrs. Frank A. Saunders, Negroes, bought another lot nearby.

Appeals Court Upholds Right Of Segregation

Richmond, Va., Dec. 7 (AP).—The United States Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals today upheld the right of an interstate carrier to segregate the seating of Negro and white passengers "providing there is no discrimination in the arrangement."

The Appellate Court handed down an opinion affirming a District court judgment denying $25,000 damages to Mrs. Adeline Atwell Day, 67-year-old Negro woman of Syracuse, N. Y., who claimed she was forced off an Atlantic Greyhound bus in South Hill, Va.

The three-man court ruled that "the adoption of a reasonable regulation by an interstate carrier for the segregation of passengers does not violate the law as laid down by the Supreme Court."

The court's opinion, written by Judge Morris A. Soper, said the court felt itself restrained from inquiring into whether the segregation of the races in public vehicles is in itself inherently discriminatory.

On the subject of segregation in motor carriers by regulation of the State, Judge Soper's opinion quoted the Supreme Court decision, in Morgan versus Virginia, which held that a Virginia statute calling for segregation of Negro and white passengers in motor carriers "imposes an undue burden on interstate commerce and therefore violates . . . the Federal Constitution" in requiring passengers, if necessary, to change their seats repeatedly.

The opinion said there was no doubt that a regulation of the carrier which involves repeated shifting of seats by Negroes would in itself amount to discriminatory treatment in deprivation of the just rights of Negroes.

But that was not the case before the court, the opinion said.

"When the plaintiff was requested to move, the bus was empty except for herself and the shift could have been made without substantial inconvenience either to the other passengers or to herself," the opinion stated.

It's five o'clock, Tuesday, December 30, 1947.
The people of Canon City, Colorado, are preparing for another quiet winter evening. Snow is just beginning to fall. Dusk almost hides the grim silhouette of the State Penitentiary on the edge of town.
Suddenly it happens!
A siren screams—then another—and another—shattering the air itself with their terrifying wails.
Twelve desperate convicts—murderers, kidnappers—armed with crude shotguns, clubs and knives have battered their blood-mad way to freedom in the most spectacular jailbreak of our time!
Dragging as hostages four brutally beaten guards, they force their frenzied way into homes at gun point.
Thus began in Canon City a three day reign of terror that startled the nation with screaming headlines from coast-to-coast . . . a reign of terror broken only when the town fought back!

Inaugural to Ask $200,000 Pledges

District businessmen will be asked to underwrite a minimum of $200,000 as a guarantee fund for the festivities centering around the January 20 inaugural.

This was disclosed yesterday by Robert V. Fleming, chairman of the finance committee, following a meeting with his group. Fleming said the amount had been decided upon after "complete and thorough discussion of the manner in which to raise it."

He termed it "absolutely essential" that subscriptions be larger and more widespread than in previous inaugurals because of increased costs. He stressed the importance of securing subscriptions promptly.

At the same time, Inaugural Committee Chairman Melvin D. Hildreth announced that a contract for $54,950 has been let for building of the Presidential parade review stands and other stands along Pennsylvania ave. near the White House.

The contract was awarded to Skinker & Garrett, 1719 I st. nw., and will enable the committee to keep all seats along the parade route in the $2 to $10 range, Hildreth said.

Applications are still being received at the Tariff Building, 700 E st. nw., for parade tickets. The only seats available, however, cost $6 and $8 and are in stands in front of the Treasury annex and Riggs National Bank, along the north and south sides of the Treasury Building, and in the White House-Lafayette Square area.

In announcing the $200,000 minimum guarantee fund to be sought, Fleming also named the officers of the commitee.

Vice chairmen: Robert H. Lacey, National Metropolitan Bank; Mark Lansburgh, Lansburgh & Bro.; H. Randolph Maddox, Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co.; L. Gardner Moore, manager, Shoreham Hotel; H. L. Rust, jr., president, H. L. Rust Co., and Wilmer J. Waller, Hamilton National Bank. John M. Christie of Riggs National Bank is executive secretary.

The following serve on the executive committee of the finance committee:

John G. Bell, A. Julian Brylawski, Lee D. Butler, Lowry N. Coe, James E. Colliflower, James A. Councilor, jr., John H. Davis, sr., Tilford E. Dudley, Richard P. Dunn, A. G. Earnest, J. Clifford Folger, Gerald D. Grosner, Granville Gude, Gilbert Hahn.

Also Maurice K. Heartfield, Theodore Hudson, Samuel H. Kaufmmann, Thomas T. Keane, Milton S. Kronheim, L. Howell Lamotte, jr., Ralph W. Lee, jr., James B. Luttes, Edward L. McAleer, William J. McManus, Kirk Miller, D. L. Moorman, E. K. Morris.

Also Alfred G. Neal, Maurice L. Nee, Victor H. Peterson, Clement F. Preller, William H. Press, Jennings Randolph, James H. Simon, Ward B. Stringham, Arthur Sundlun, Philip M. Talbott, Martin Wiegand and A. D. Willard.

'Fuzzy-wuzzies'

Bishop Seeks Papua 'Angel' Aid Funds

The Anglican Bishop of New Guinea, the Right Rev. Philip N. W. Strong, arrived in Washington yesterday to raise funds for the Papuan "Fuzzy-Wuzzy Angels" natives who saved the lives of scores of wounded Americans during World War II and who make up the bishop's diocese.

Bishop Strong

A familiar figure to veterans of the South Pacific, Bishop Strong was target of the first shot fired by the Japanese when they landed on the east coast of New Guinea. He hopes to contact many of the veterans whose lives were saved by his parishioners.

At a press conference yesterday, the bishop related instances in which his natives had saved American lives and told of the immediate need for the reconstruction of hospitals, churches, schools and villages destroyed by the war in New Guinea.

Much heavy equipment left by United States forces, which would have been "invaluable" in the reconstruction of New Guinea, was destroyed or intentionally sunk at sea, the bishop said.

Bishop Strong will address solemn evensong and benediction tonight at 8 p. m. at the Ascension and St. Agnes' Episcopal Church, 12th st. and Massachusetts ave., after which he will attend an organizational meeting there of the Regional American Church Union.

Administration Bans Blanket 15% Rent Rise

By The Associated Press

President Truman's Administration has at least tentatively rejected proposals for a blanket 15 per cent rent boost in 1949, but may approve some increases under tightened controls.

That was the picture disclosed yesterday in a round robin of statements by Government officials.

They also reported there has been "very considerable pressure" to permit rents to go up generally, but both the White House and Housing Expediter Tighe Woods were described as frowning on such action.

Here's the way a spokesman in the Housing Expediter's office outlined next year's rent control law, if built to Administration plans:

Fifteen per cent rent increases would be permitted if landlords and tenants agree on leases—i.e., leases which protect tenants from being evicted—but in such cases the homes would be kept under rent control.

That, in turn, means that the landlord must keep up the same janitorial, decorating and other services which the Rent Control Act would require in the absence of a lease.

But although 15 per cent increases would be permitted under these circumstances, only one such boost would be allowed. In other words, a tenant who started paying 15 per cent more rent in 1947 or 1948, under previous rent legislation, will not be subject to another increase next year.

Official reports show that 1,700,000 tenants voluntarily signed leases providing for 15 per cent hikes in 1947 and another 300,000 did the same this year. There are an estimated 15 million renters in this country.

Housing Expediter Woods' office said he will seek "at least" a one-year extension of the control law which expires next April 1.

Truman to Ask $16,000,000 for Arab-Jewish Aid

President Truman said yesterday he will ask Congress to appropriate up to 16 million dollars as this country's share of United Nations assistance for Jewish and Arab refugees in Palestine.

The White House said Mr. Truman said that "in no case," however, will he ask Congress for more than half of the 32 million dollars refugee fund authorized by U. N.'s General Assembly.

His request will be made to Congress in January, the White House said.

Percentagewise, 16 million dollars would be quite a bit more than the United States contributes to the operation of the United Nations itself and other international organizations.

The State Department estimated there are from 500,000 to 550,000 Arab refugees in the Middle East and some 7000 Jewish Refugees.

The program will be headed by Stanton Griffis, American Ambassador to Egypt.

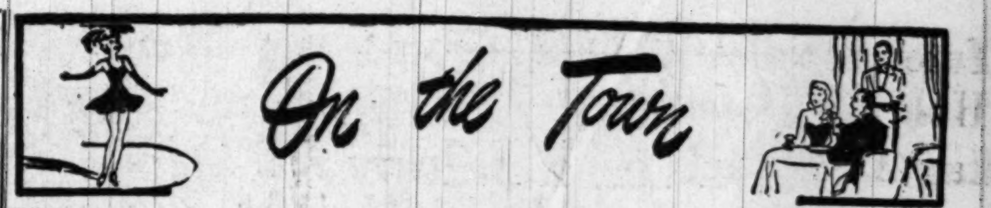
Collier's to Get Libel Case Retrial

New Orleans, Dec. 7 (AP).—A $237,500 libel judgment against the Crowell-Collier Publishing Co. in favor of Gov. Millard Caldwell of Florida was reversed and remanded for retrial today by the United States Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals.

The judgment grew out of an editorial in Collier's magazine in February, 1946.

Governor Caldwell's suit charged the editorial falsely and maliciously quoted him as condoning the lynching of a Negro.

The Court of Appeals decision said "the trial was allowed to get out of bounds almost from its beginning to its end."



THE 'It never seems to fail' department: Whenever we happen to miss a show at the Shoreham it's a particularly good act and is always held over for another week. So when we do manage to arrive at the Blue Room in our usually breathless state, and are introduced to the act, they invariably come up with, "Oh! But we were here last week, too."

Needless to say, the event didn't fail last week when Ted and Phyllis Rodriguez opened. All would have ended well for us if Max Lowe, the booker for the Shoreham, hadn't made a call to the Rodriguez room opening night after the last show and left a message for Ted to drop down for a talk the next day. Being a very conscientious dancer, Ted had to call back that night to see if anything was wrong with the act. Right then and there, and it's unusual for it to happen on opening night, Max asked Tony and the Mrs. to stay for a second week. The next night came a tentative request for a third week. Needless to say, Booker Lowe is not in the habit of asking slewfooted or three-legged dancers to stay for more than one week, let alone three, so you know they must be good.

For a newly formed team (not quite 2½ years), the Rodriguezes exhibit some of the smoothest dancing we've seen for some time. In no time they'll be enjoying the same rarified oxygen that Tony and Sally DeMarco, Artini and Consuelo and the other top acts are enjoying today. And all this despite the fact that it usually takes five to seven years for a dance team to be really able to dance well together.

The team started out in rather an odd manner. Draw up a barstool, my children, while we partake of a bit of story telling. Before the war Ted was a tap dancer from Puerto Rico. He did as well as the other hoofers of this clan, which wasn't too well. Ted hoofed around this bistro and that for a while and then did a command performance in Uncle Sam's Club. After the war he made tracks for Hollywood, where he opened a dance studio.

Not long afterward he was a judge in a rhumba contest. He picked the winning girl, liked her and her dancing and talked her into becoming his partner. They had hoofed and rehearsed for a year when Ted, as he puts it, figured it was cheaper to marry her and did. We'll have to call that one a gross prevarication because they just look too happy dancing together not to be in love. At any rate that was a year and a half ago and they've been going great guns ever since. If the Nation's niteries manage to stay open a few more years this team will be on top, watch 'em.

Velma Sherry handles the tapping end of the show. Variety, the show biz bible, called her the fastest spinning tap dancer in the business. She does spin fast, too.

HERE'S a bit of intelligence on Bandleader Barnee Breeskin. A few nights back Barnee spotted Senator Glenn Taylor dancing in the Blue Room and told the Senator that there was a request for him to sing "The Missouri Waltz." Taylor never tumbled to the quip and replied, "But I don't know the words." After he had walked most of the way back to his table and his wife had worn two layers of skin from his ribs wising him up he dashed back to the bandstand and said, "Well, the little guy did it." Humph! Wonder who let that secret out!

The Neptune Room will be getting a new bass player soon, we hear. "Ham" Lovett, the bass player, has been grooming his wife to take over for him. It seems that "Ham" has a yen for the concert stage. His wife has been practicing on a half-size bass for some time and should be ready for the bandstand in five or six months. We haven't heard where "Ham" plans to go.

The Club Cairo opens a new show tomorrow night with Lee Wyler as comic, Lorraine Kay as the vocal gal and Johnny Conrad booked in to fill the large shoes (in achievement, anyway) of Bobby Brandt.

Here's a worth-while benefit for you philanthropists. Tomorrow night the Junior Police and Citizens Corps is having a benefit at Uline Arena. They're having local radio and stage stars, and in addition to that Pearl Bailey and Lionel Hampton will be on tap. They haven't been able to broadcast the fact, since they're both appearing elsewhere in town, but our ear in the wall found out for us.

DeLashmutt Pays $198,000 to Take Oak Hill Estate

The sale of Oak Hill, former home of James Monroe, near Leesburg, Va., was finally completed yesterday with payment of $198,000 by the new owner, Thomas N. DeLashmutt.

DeLashmutt, an Arlington builder had paid 10 per cent of the purchase price—$220,000—when he bought the 1725-acre estate at auction September 2. Completion of the sale was delayed to give former owner Frank C. Littleton 90 days to redeem his property.

DeLashmutt made the final payment yesterday afternoon to Howard W. Smith, jr., of Alexandria, a trustee of the estate. Smith turned over the deed to DeLashmutt, and the money to the Alexandria District Court, whose officials said it will be used to pay Littleton's debts.

Yuletide Sales 'Holding' Here, Lag Elsewhere

By S. Oliver Goodman

Below original expectations, Christmas buying in Washington stores appears to be holding its own with last year. Reports from other large cities indicate that volume is under a year ago.

One large department store here reported that "after a slow November, sales are running slightly better than in the same December period." Another store noted that its volume last week was exactly $48 above that of the same 1947 week. A third big retailer reported that sales the past two weeks were "holding their own with last year."

The latest report from the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond showed that Washington department stores sales in the week ended November 27 were 4 per cent higher than in the same 1947 period. For the four weeks ended November 27, local volume was reported 2 per cent lower.

Meanwhile, disquieting reports on sales are being received from other parts of the Nation. The New York Federal Reserve Bank reported that Gotham store sales last week were 10 per cent below last year's. Some retail executives blamed the warm weather and also mentioned high prices and a change in public psychology caused by the election upset.

Sales in Pittsburgh, Chicago, San Francisco and Boston all are under last year. But merchants in Dallas, Philadelphia and Cleveland said their business had picked up last week and was slightly above a year ago.

One local spokesman "conceded" that the postwar sales peak was reached last Christmas. He expects business to be good this year, but not as high as the record Yule sales of 1947.

FIRST DIVIDEND: The Seaboard Air Line Roalroad Co. yesterday declared a $1 dividend, the first since the line's reorganization in 1946. The dividend is for 1947 and is payable December 31 to holders of voting trust certificates for common stock of record December 17.

FAVORABLE VOTE: Potomac Electric Power Co. yesterday was authorized to increase its outstanding debt by five million dollars. Preferred stockholders at a special meeting voted 136,044 shares in favor of the proposal and 2888 opposed. Altogether, there are outstanding 225,000 shares of the 3.60 per cent preferred stock. A company spokesman explained that Pepco will seek a line of additional bank credit "around the first of the year." This would help the utility to meet current needs without offering more securities at this time. Previously unsecured debt limit of Pepco was 12 million dollars.

DIP IN SALES: Safeway Stores reported sales of $89,626,532 for the four weeks ended November 27, a dip of 2 per cent under $91,472,437 in the like 1947 period. Sales for the 48 weeks ended November 27 totaled $1,154,680,913, up 13.3 per cent.

ODD LOTS: American toy makers expect toy sales for this year to exceed 300 million dollars, an all-time record and 20 per cent ahead of last year . . . Apex Electric Manufacturing Co. reported it has curtailed operations by one third. The maker of ironing and washing machines pinned major blame on a new law requiring buyers to put up 20 per cent of the retail price as a down payment . . . Business failures increased to 126 in the week ended December 2 from the 101 in the preceding holiday period, Dun & Bradstreet reported . . . Zenith Radio Corp. has purchased the Rauland Corp. of Chicago, maker of cathode ray tubes for television . . . Royal Typewriter Co. has announced a Christmas bonus of an extra 40 hours pay for employes of a year or more service.

Rally Fades, Stocks Close Slightly Off

New York, Dec. 7 (AP).—The stock market closed slightly lower today after attempts at a rally failed to develop real punch.

Prices were marked down after the opening bell but lower tendencies were blocked almost immediately. A timid advance for the balance of the session trimmed many of the morning declines and lifted some issues to the plus side.

WHAT STOCKS DID

	Tues.	Mon.
Advances	380	457
Declines	423	341
Unchanged	248	256
Total issues	1051	1054

Volume of 1,140,000 shares topped the one-million-share mark for the tenth full day of trading in a row and compared with 1,180,000 Monday.

Traders kept an eye out for particular stocks that looked good to them rather than concentrating on the usual market leaders. As a result many favorites ended a trifle lower.

Tax selling continued but not in any serious volume. Switching operations supplied a good part of the turnover.

The Associated Press average of 60 stocks dipped .1 of 1 point to 64.4, the first average setback in a week. The decline was considered of small significance because of the close balance of individual gains and losses.

Zenith Radio jumped 2¼ to 32, one of the largest gains. Brokers linked the advance with news that the company had purchased the Rauland Corp., makers of cathode ray tubes for television pictures, a deal which apparently assures the company of a source of tube supply.

A. T. & T. Debentures Offered

Sale of 150 million dollars American Telephone & Telegraph 3⅜ per cent debentures due 1973 to an underwriting group headed by First Boston Corp. claimed top interest in financial circles yesterday.

The group bid 100.71 for the issue and reoffered the debentures at 101.61 to yield 3.28 per cent. About 80 per cent of the issue was sold by late in the day.

The 3⅜ per cent coupon on which the high bid was based was the highest in recent years for A. T. and T., and higher than on any of its currently outstanding indebtedness.

The debenture issue by A. T. and T., parent company of the Bell System, is the first offered this year.

The last big issue by A. T. and T. consisted off $357,532,000 in 10-year 2¾ per cent convertible debentures sold in November, 1947, largest single financing operation in the company's history. Ninety-seven per cent of the issue was sold to shareholders. The issue on which bids were received yesterday is not convertible.

Industry Plans Cut in Outlays, IBA Is Told

By Harry T. Montgomery

Hollywood, Fla., Dec. 7 (AP).—The Nation's investment bankers were told today that the postwar expansion of American industry had passed its peak but that total business expenditures in 1949 would be down only about 10 per cent over the high rate of this year.

In financing next year's expenditures, however, industry will lean on earnings, and its need for outside money "will be considerably reduced," the bankers were advised.

The forecast was contained in a report laid before the annual convention of the Investment Bankers Association of America by its committee on industrial securities.

Many of the largest industrial concerns, which got into postwar expansion early, "are apparently scheduled to cut back their outlays by one-third or more in 1949 as compared with 1948," the committee said. But added that manufacturers as a group would probably cut back not more than 20 per cent.

High level spending by mining, railroad and public utility enterprises probably will continue, the committee predicted, "so that total business expenditures may be down only 10 per cent," with a decline in business capital spending of from two billion dollars to three billion dollars.

On the assumption that business earnings next year can hold up to within about 15 per cent below 1948, the internal generation of capital funds would be approximately adequate to meet this spending program and continue dividends at the 1948 level," the committee observed.

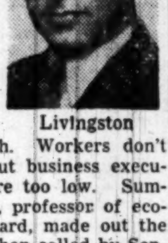
Profits Vary With Viewpoint: High to Labor, Low to Capital

By J. A. Livingston

IS JOE LOUIS too tall or too short? Is Lauritz Melchoir's voice too strong or too weak? And, to get to the question a joint House-subcommittee is asking, are corporation profits too high or too low?

The questions are all in the same class. Joe Louis seems to be just about the right size for a prize fighter. On the other hand, he's too big to be a jockey. Melchior does all right singing for the Metropolitan Opera, but he might not be the perfect man for hog-calling or announcing at Madison Square Garden.



Livingston

So it is with profits. Labor leaders like Philip Murray and Walter Reuther say they're too high. Workers don't get enough. But business executives feel they're too low. Sumner H. Slichter, professor of economics at Harvard, made out the business case when called by Senator Flanders, chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on the President's Economic Report. Slichter observed that corporations are not getting back from their customers the cost of wear and tear on their plant and equipment. That's another way of saying depreciation charges are too low. They're based on prewar prices for brick, mortar and machinery. But try to replace a modern steel plant for what it cost prewar!

SLITCHER also stated dramatically that corporations have been overstating profits by about five billion a year "because of failure to deduct the rise in cost of replacing inventories." Obviously, here is a nonrecurring profit—something businessmen can't count on. Once prices stop rising, theoretically corporate profits will drop about five billion dollars a year.

The answer to the question, "How big are profits?" depends on the point of view. And since 1929 the point of view has changed. As C. Reinold Noyes, president of the National Bureau of Economic Research, has put it: "Risk-taking on a large scale is now considered socially beneficial if you lose and socially harmful if you win. Society says, in effect, 'Heads I win, tails you lose.'"

The depression and the rise of the labor unions as a political force account for this new evaluation of profits, of the earnings of capital. Modern society does not go in for rewarding as heavily as formerly the fruits of past labor. This is shown by the drop in interest rates, by the indifference of the stock market to high per share earnings and above-average dividend rates.

THE SQUEEZE on profits tends to correct disparities in income—to raise the level of living of workers closer to that of executives and persons who live on their income. At the same time, it has reduced the economic power of the big man of industry. The corporate share of the Nation's "real income" has dropped from 10.6 per cent in 1929 to 8.8 per cent. The share of the wage-and-salary earner has gone up from 56.6 per cent to 62.1 per cent. But it also has a tendency to diminish investor and speculator confidence in stocks and bonds. Capital is in hiding—if not on strike. Reason: Each advance in profits results in increased demands for higher wages.

So, to the question, are profits too high? Senator Flanders will get opinions—not answers. He'll get statements from labor union leaders that profits are putting the squeeze on workers; from businessmen that they're running out of capital and therefore can't continue to expand; from investment bankers that corporations, because they can't sell common stocks, are becoming overcommitted to debt.

UNFORTUNATELY, the test of any rate of profit—of any distribution of income—is how it works. Profit is measured not by numbers of dollars or percentages, but rather by how the rate profit works, by how society fares. If the increasing share of income now tending to go to workers results in greater economic stability, well and good. But if the diminishing share of income inuring to corporations results in a shortage of capital, a depression and lower income for all—workers, capital, and consumers—then it's bad.

This last might well happen. In a democratic society it often takes a crisis—a depression—to correct maldistributions in an economic power. The 1929-33 depression hurt everybody, but had the permanent effect of curbing big business. Is it possible that the next depression may curb labor?

Chicago Grain

Chicago, Dec. 7 (AP).—Scattered liquidation carried grain futures lower on the Board of Trade today. The heaviest loser was soybeans, which broke sharply when stop-loss orders were uncovered on the way down.

One of the factors in the decline of wheat was freer offerings of cash wheat in the Southwest. At Kansas City the December wheat contract was weak, with spot wheat trading basis reported lower.

Cutbacks in the scheduled exports of oats to France had an adverse effect on the December contract.

At the close wheat was 1 to 1⅞ cents lower than the previous close. Corn was ¼ to ¾ lower; oats were unchanged to 2⅛ lower; rye was 2½ to 3 lower; soybeans were 1¾ to 4 lower, and lard was 10 cents a hundredweight higher to 20 cents lower.

New York Cotton

New York, Dec. 7 (AP).—Cotton futures were under pressure of profit-taking today, losing 60 cents to $1 a bale lower. Traders attributed the reaction primarily to technical reasons, following the sustained rise in futures during the past month amounting to $8 to $10 a bale. Replacement buying developed from traders who believed that prices would be bolstered by the heavy rate of loan entries and the considerable increase in export demand through the ECA program.

PAA May Acquire American Airlines' Overseas Affiliate

New York, Dec. 7 (AP).—Dow Jones & Co., business news service, said today in a copyrighted article that "negotiations are under way for the acquisition by Pan American Airways of American Airlines' subsidiary, American Overseas Airlines, Inc."

The news story added:

"American Airlines owns approximately 62 per cent of the capital stock of American Overseas Airlines, which operates between the United States, England and northern and central Europe.

"No details of the proposed acquisition are available and officials of both companies have declined comment."

Sales Peak Set In Canned Foods

Portland, Me., Dec. 7 (AP).—The nation's housewives have bought more canned fruits and vegetables this year than ever before, the executive secretary of the National Canners Association said yesterday.

"Apparently women have observed that the family budget goes further when they purchase canned fruits and vegetables, Carlos Cambell of Washington said in an address prepared for the Maine Canners' Association.

"This," he asserted, "is because the retail prices of these products have advanced less than any other food group, according to the United States Bureau of Labor cost-of-living indexes. . . .

The prices, he added, have advanced "considerably less than has average income."

Grumbling Guest

Some people simply have to get...Their troubles off their chests...But they should never do it when...They are invited guests...It is all right to talk in tears...And now and then complain...About a seeming tragedy...Or just a cloud of rain...To be dissatisfied with life...Or feel a wrong is done...When others get their wishes or...The prizes that are won...But misery and mournful moods...Are not the things to share...When those who think they have them are...Invited anywhere...Such conduct cannot ever be...Becoming to the guest...For it reveals the invitee...As somewhat of a pest.

What's the Verdict?

ALIMONY AWARD

Q. A husband was awarded a divorce for desertion, but the court awarded the wife alimony of $60 a month. Appealing the decision against her, the wife demanded and received the alimony payments. The husband then contended that by demanding and getting the alimony, the wife had waived her right to appeal, even though destitute. Is he right?

A. It is not unusual for a husband who is awarded a divorce nevertheless to be required to pay alimony. But if the wife accepts payments under the award, she forfeits the right to appeal, even though she is without money. This seemingly harsh rule is not as bad as it appears, because she is entitled to refuse to accept any of the $60-a-month award and apply to the court for a separate allowance and suit money to finance an appeal.—F. L. D.

Theft of property valued at less than $50 is petty larceny by District law. What's the Verdict? Monday gave $35 as the crucial figure. The law was changed in 1937.

MAIL BAG

Dear Bill:

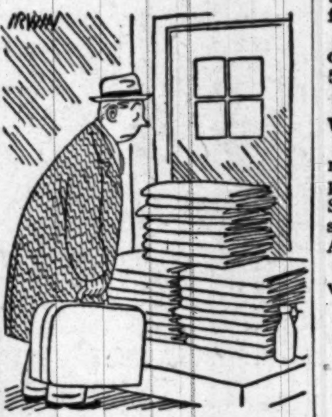
We get three local papers at our house—yours and two others. I called the circulation departments of all three recently, to inform them that I would be out of town for eight days, and wanted my delivery stopped during that period.

When I returned home, I found 24 newspapers piled up before my door.

And the payoff is that I have now received a letter welcoming me back, and informing me that if I will just "fill in and mail the inclosed card," daily deliveries will be resumed.

Grrrrrr!

M. A. C.



Dear M. A. C.:

Our only consolation is that our two contemporaries also fumbled the ball.

I'm passing your name and address along to our circulation director, who always investigates these reports with a view to improving everybody's service.

We appreciate constructive criticism, because it helps us do a better job. But I hope you'll remember that delivering The Washington Post to our subscribers is something akin to executing millions of individual assignments each year, and in a job of that magnitude there are bound to be some human errors.

Bill.

WE STAND CORRECTED

Henry Peterson of 4710 Edgemoor lane, Bethesda, Md., complains that the Herald Trib's Red Smith (or our printers) telescoped a recent reference to an Ambrose Bierce definition.

Henry says that the original version goes like this:

> "Academe—n., ancient school where morality and philosophy were taught.
> "Academy—n., (from academe). Modern school where football is taught."

SOLACE FOR PASTORS

It's a good thing most clergymen have a sense of humor.

Ever since the District's crackdown on tardiness in filing marriage certificates, the pastors have taken a good deal of kidding from their flocks. It usually takes the form of:

> "Don't worry—we'll bring you some nice hot soup every day when they lock you up."

SPEECHLESS POLITICIAN

Wayne "Chay" Coy, jr., of 5215 Watson st. nw. and his brother Stephen got away with ball point pens bearing the legend "Stolen from the desk of Harry Truman."

Their confederate in the escapade was this same Harry Truman, who gave them the pens and then admonished them to hide the booty until they were out of the White House and safely past the Secret Service men.

Chay is 10 years old, and Steve 17. They went up to the White House with their pop, Wayne Coy, chairman of the FCC, who was there on business.

Chay's purpose in accompanying his dad was to ask for an autograph. But when he faced the President, he was speechless.

Mr. Truman laughed, and recalled that he'd also been speechless the first time he met President Roosevelt—because FDR did all the talking.

(P. S.: Chay got the autograph anyhow).

MAN OF THE YEAR?

Whittaker Chambers seems destined to leave his microfilm prints on the sands of TIME.

Leonard Lyons . . .

NEW YORK.—Louis Fischer, the historian, recently went to India to gather material for a biography of Gandhi . . . Gandhi, he learned, never saw a movie, either silent or talkie, until he was 75 years old. This first movie was "Mission to Moscow," He didn't like it.

Jay Irving, the cartoonist, gives art courses to the paraplegic veterans at Halloran General Hospital. He recently fell, strained a ligament in his leg and now needs a cane. This week, when he limped into Halloran to start his lecture, he heard the paraplegics in wheel chairs greet him, "What're you doing, goldbricking?" . . . Irving assured them that he needed the cane. He started to take a few steps without the cane, fell and winced . . . "Gee," sighed one of the patients, "it must be wonderful to feel pain."

In his forthcoming book Maurice Chevalier will tell of the night he heard his valet say: "Phone call for you. A man—he'd like to see you later. Says he's the Duke of Windson" . . . "Tell him I can't see him, because I'm supping with Napoleon," said Chevalier, and started to dress, while muttering about the strange devices used by New Yorkers who want to speak to actors . . . Chevalier then escorted a lady to a nightclub where he saw the Duke of Windsor. The Duke glanced at the lady, then said to Chevalier, "She doesn't even look like Napoleon."

Marcel Cerdan's manager took the champ to the sports department of Ce Soir, the Paris newspaper. The sportswriters there greeted Cerdan warmly, sang his praises and then quoted from their ecstatic accounts of his victory over Tony Zale . . . Cerdan bowed his head modestly, and said: "Aw, no. These wonderful things you say about me—you make me feel as if I were De Gaulle" . . . A pall struck the room, a pall explained by Cerdan's manager who whispered to him: "Ce Soir's a Communist paper."

Mark Twain had a method for getting rid of characters he no longer had a use for. They all happened to fall in the well and drown. That exit of Mr. Merrie's isn't as plausible from a literary point of view, perhaps, but—
Why not? He just happened to go "Pouf!" By magic...
People don't go "Pouf!" and disappear because they happen to be standing in front of a exorcistic circle, little girl—
Well—
Or because they mumble a phrase of gibberish, like
ZATA ABBATA—

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

An Opportunity Lost for Texas

By Drew Pearson

Perry Brown of Beaumont, Tex., the American Legion's new national commander, missed a chance to advertise Texas when he visited the White House with Louis Johnson, former Assistant Secretary of War.

Perry Brown

As photographers marched in for news shots after the meeting, President Truman reached down in his desk and dug out his old "Missouri" Legion cap. There was an embarrassed pause while the red-faced Brown suggested that they pose without headgear.

The Legion boss had forgotten to bring along his "Texas" cap.

U. S. Foreign Legion?

The Army is toying with the idea of organizing an American Foreign Legion in western Europe—composed of refugee Europeans equipped with American arms and taking their orders from the United States Army.

This was revealed by Secretary of the Army Kenneth Royall to a group of Congressmen just back from Europe. The Congressmen reported that several young men in western Europe—particularly refugee Poles—had approached them about joining the American Army and had declared they would rather serve the United States than their own governments.

Royall countered with the idea of taking these men not into the U. S. Army proper, but into an American foreign legion.

The Congressmen also suggested to Royall that he could improve American troop morale overseas by paying GI's in dollars rather than foreign currency. The GI's are getting clipped. The Congressmen said, because their pay is worth only a fraction of the black market of what they get at the official exchange rate.

Near Upset in Kansas

President Truman was told last week that his failure to speak in Kansas during the campaign cost him that State's eight electoral votes.

"If you made two speeches in my State you would have carried it," declared Carl Rice, Democratic National Committeeman from Kansas. "As it was, we cut the Republican majority to less than 70,000 votes, and their majority was 154,000 against Roosevelt in 1944.

"In my own home county—Wyandotte—we elected every Democrat on the ticket, from top to bottom," concluded Rice.

Truman admitted he had been fooled by the Kansas outcome.

"I didn't realize how close it would be there, but the way my schedule was arranged it was impossible for me to make any speeches in Kansas," he explained.

However, the President said he would try to make amends by doing his best to speak at the big Democratic "Washington Day" dinner in Topeka in February.

Steel Argument

A hot backstage feud is going on between the Commerce and Interior Department over steel controls.

The Commerce Department, which leans toward business, believes that voluntary controls are adequate, that the steel industry can be trusted to ration out steel where it is needed. It takes this view despite the fact that the steel industry recently refused steel to the Government itself for the Oak Ridge atomic plant.

The Interior Department, on the other hand, argues that even mandatory controls aren't far-reaching enough, that the Government must go still further and force the steel industry to expand production.

Both sides argued their case face-to-face recently before Budget Director James Webb. No decision was reached.

Merry-Go-Round

The secret device revealed on the microfilms of former spy Whittaker Chambers is a now-obsolete aircraft communication instrument . . . Talking to visiting Congressmen, Paul Ramadier of France remarked: "The heart of every Frenchman is part American." . . . Russian diplomats indicate that Russia will soon raise one corner of the Iron Curtain and permit travel to Russia through the Soviet bureau, "Intoursit," which has been closed down for years. If so, it's almost revolutionary. Reports from American military observers in Berlin disclose no further signs that Russia is reinforcing its troops in Berlin, even though Soviet officials are now attempting complete domination of the city.

Senator Was Right

Republicans are now looking back ruefully on a warning, issued two months before the election by Maine's Senator-elect Margaret Chase Smith. Mrs. Smith showed that not only is her State a political barometer but she herself had the correct political intuition. Speaking in Boston, she actually cautioned against taking the early Republican victory in Maine as a sure sign of what was to come nationally.

"After sober reflection and careful analysis of the Maine vote," she declared, "I feel that we must guard against misinterpretation. Actually the Maine results constitute a warning to Republicans nationally that we must roll up our sleeves and start ringing doorbells."

Then she painted a statistical picture.

"The Republican gubernatorial nominee," Mrs. Smith pointed out, "won by a margin of 65.5 per cent. If we should apply past voting statistics . . . the 1948 Republican gubernatorial vote would indicate a national 45.6 per cent for the Republicans. This would mean a Democratic victory of percentage proportions great enough to take not only the White House but also both houses of Congress."
